Serve Your Turkey Whole—but Sliced

By POPPY CANNON

Now even a host can eat a holiday dinner in peace. No more mayhem at the table, no more maimed birds. You take your own sweet time to carve. Do it in the privacy of your own kitchen, without an audience to fuss you, without someone clamoring for seconds before you've finished carving the first round. Now you can have your turkey and enjoy it too.

We learned it from the Waldorf—this technique of carving the turkey and putting it together again so that it looks whole. Up to now it's been almost a trade secret known only to a few top-flight chefs. It's really easy, provided you have a first-class knife and a large cutting board.

Select a fine full-breasted bird. The Waldorf allows one pound per person, which takes care of seconds or even thirds. The method shown us by Chef George Blanc leaves the wings and back intact. You can carve this later if needed.

For the final touch of elegance, decorate the drum sticks with gigantic turkey frills which you can buy from a caterer or at some specialty food shops. Or, you might prefer to use chrysanthemums, artificial or real, securing them into a wide band placed around the turkey leg. Candied orange shells filled with cranberry sauce, relish or sherbet make an interesting platter garnish.

(Please turn the page)

PHOTOGRAPH BY GEORGE LAZARNICK

Here's how turkey will look when it comes to the table pre-cut. We have separated the slices slightly to show you that the meat really has been cut. Slicing was done 30 to 45 minutes after roasting; it's next to impossible to slice meat just out of the oven.

How to do it:

Equip yourself with a good, sharp, strong knife, preferably a French chef's knife or a first-class carving knife—also, a smaller boning knife. Carving forks or holders are unnecessary. Since you are going to do the job off stage, you can steady the bird with your hands.

Remove legs and second joints. Put aside. Remove breast in one fine piece making a long cut along the breast bone.

Now make a straight cut parallel to the table, above the wings. Your knife must be razor sharp to cut through crisp skin.

You now have a neat elongated piece of meat. This you slice crosswise, leaving two rather large pieces at each end.

Hold the sliced meat closely gathered up in your two hands, cradling them on your outstretched palms with the fingertips touching and lift them into their proper place. If there is any tendency to skid, use dressing as a foundation. Rearrange the skin so that the breast looks as whole as possible.

Now let's get back to the drumstick department. Separate the second joint from the leg. At this point the conscientious chef will chop off the end of the bone leaving a slim shaft to accommodate the traditional frill. If you have difficulty finding frills, you can make them yourself from white paper or foil.

With a slender knife remove bone from second joint. You don't really need a special boning knife. Any flexible knife will do for this job. Once you discover how many more servings can be had from poultry after it has been boned, you will resort to boning much more often.

Turn skin side up, and slice meat lengthwise into strips. Replace drumstick and sliced second joint into original position. If you wish you may slice the meat of the drumstick lengthwise into four pieces. If slices tend to separate, hold them together with a small skewer.

Chicken is cut in sections . . .

Cut off the legs with the second joint. Separate drumstick from second joint. Cut off the wings along with a good part of the breast from the back. If the chicken is larger than broiler size, cut the breast crosswise through the bone into two parts. This leaves only the back, which you turn upside down to use as a base for rebuilding your chicken.

Photograph above shows the parts into which the chicken is cut. Numbered outline sketch indicates how the pieces are reset—all quite according to nature, except that the breast rests on the upturned back and the drumsticks are held up by the thighs!

THE FEATURES OF THIS MONTH

Here is the second in our new regular series on how to use House Beautiful in the study and teaching of art appreciation, home planning, furnishing and decorating

For everyone who is interested in studying architecture, in learning how to plan a house, how to furnish and decorate it, this month's issue has a variety of interesting and challenging features. Each one can be made the basis of a lesson assignment. Each one provides the material for further study and research.

Here are some suggestions on how to use the major articles this month for group or home study, for art instruction or specific personal problems involving the home.

A Walk Through a Good House

This important story, which begins on page 205, gives you a good opportunity to analyze the problem of how architecture can best be shown visually. Below are some of the best-known methods. What are the advantages and what are the disadvantages of each method?

a. Floor plans
b. Renderings of façades
c. Photographs
d. Moving pictures
e. Models

How does each method meet the real problem of describing a building in terms of its most important characteristic, namely, its internal space? This is one of the most significant and crucial points in the study of architecture; until students consider it thoroughly, their understanding of architecture will be superficial and without much meaning. You can approach it best by considering each method above and by drawing two columns with the advantages on one side and the limitations on the other. It will be an extremely valuable lesson assignment.

The Most Accommodating Room in the House (Page 220)

One reason the dining room has tended to merge with the living room is that people were reluctant to give up so much space for a room that was used only a few hours a day. However, this room is being converted more and more to many uses in addition to that of dining.

If you are a teacher, assign an exercise to your group in multi-purpose dining rooms. Have each student make various floor plans for different conditions. For instance, have him draw the floor plan of a dining-room—TV-room or of a dining-room—game-room.

In each case, have the student define the nature of the client, the client's major interests and pursuits and have him plan the dining room accordingly. He might cut out furniture from magazine pictures and paste them on his plan, or he might simply draw them in with the usual symbols. (Be sure everything he does is in scale or proper relative size, of course.)

How Modern Architecture Is Returning to the Middle West (Page 232)

Here is an opportunity to dig deeper into the story of what happened to modern, organic architecture before and after the Chicago World's Fair of 1893.

These questions could be profitably pursued:

1. What is modern, organic architecture?

2. What case can be made for dating its origins in the U.S. back to the mid-nineteenth century?

3. What does "form follows function" mean? Who originated it?

4. What are the contributions of Louis Sullivan and Frank Lloyd Wright to architecture?

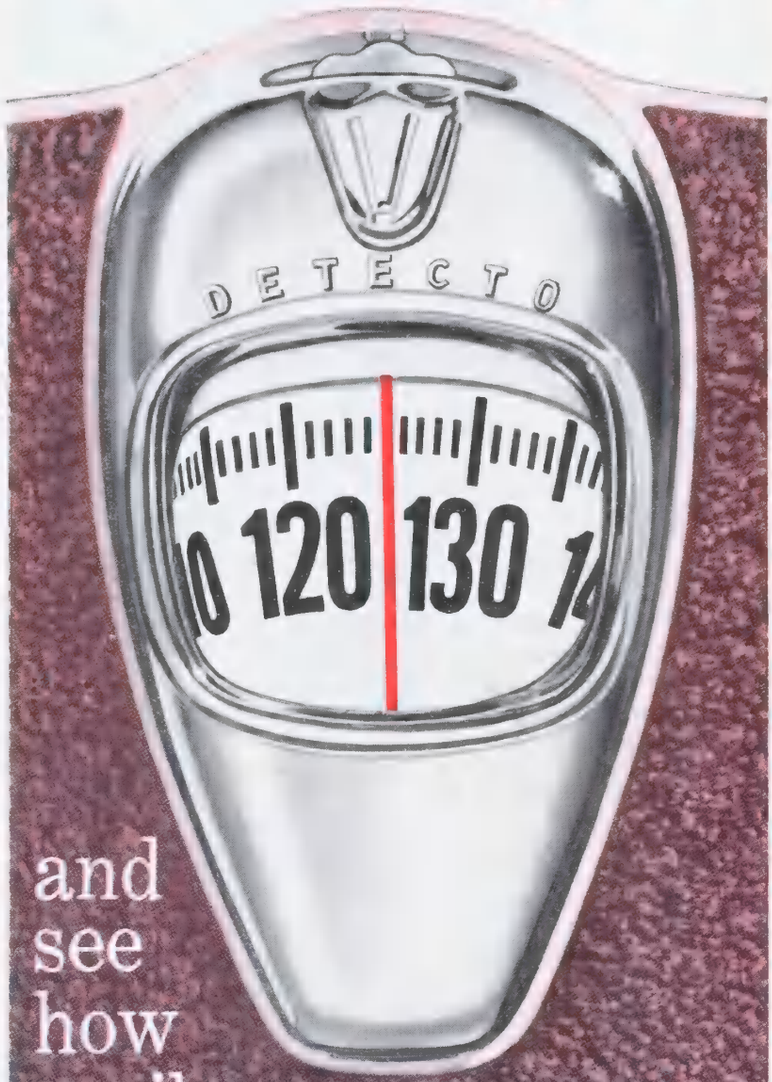
5. Why did the Chicago World's Fair of 1893 have the influence it seems to have had?

6. What distinguishes the organic school of modern architecture from the so-called International Style of Le Corbusier, Mies van der Rohe and Walter Gropius?

7. What is happening today in architecture? In residences? In public buildings?

There are a number of answers given by various people to these questions. Some of them are the subject of very partisan debate by one or the other of the two schools of modern architecture. However, there are two ways for the serious student to discover the truth for himself: first, visiting the buildings and judging them in terms of livability, adequate protection and shading of glass areas, relationship to the site, encouragement of a full, varied and comfortable life for the occupants, use of materials and philosophy of furnishings.

The second way is by reading and studying. These are the books recommended: (Some of them were referred to in last month's Home Study Course.)



Roots of Contemporary American Architecture by Lewis Mumford, the dean of our architectural critics. Published by Reinhold in 1952, it contains a series of 37 essays dating from the mid-nineteenth century to the present with a long and important introductory essay by Mr. Mumford and biographies of the 29 writers whose work is included. You will find here the answer to most of the seven questions listed above.

The Autobiography of Frank Lloyd Wright presents the personal point of view of the man most responsible for modern architecture, as we know it, from its origins in the Middle West, through the period of the Genteel Reaction that followed the Chicago World's Fair, to its return in our own time. The student would find it interesting and useful to read the work of Mr. Wright's teacher, Louis Sullivan, particularly his Kindergarten Chats, along with the Autobiography of Wright.

Towards an Organic Architecture by Bruno Zevi is, alas, only available in a British edition, but it best discusses the conflict between the two schools of modern architecture: the International

Style and organic architecture. Mr. Zevi includes a useful bibliography at the end of each of his chapters.

A Fine House Means Quality not Quantity (Page 240)

This story presents you with two possibilities: a discussion of how a house should be designed for a particular family and how modern and period furniture can be mixed successfully.

It might be a good idea to work backward in considering the design of the LeRoy house. What are the tastes of the LeRoys? What are their primary interests at home? What is their attitude toward architecture (traditional or modern; what kind of modern, if any)? What is their feeling about furniture?

In discussing the furnishing and decorating, bring up the current debate about period versus modern furniture. Is it a real or an imagined conflict? Is it possible to have both in the same room? Assign a problem in deliberately mixing period and modern in the same living room. Have the student go to the local furniture stores and make a selection of both kinds that he thinks would go together. (Or, if you are the student, give yourself the assignment. Remember to choose what you like, because that is the secret to making different things co-ordinate as if they were meant to.)

Here is a wonderful occasion to undertake one of the most fascinating aspects of architectural and furniture design: the unequalled contribution of the Chinese to both.

Over the thousands and thousands of years of their civilization, the Chinese have discovered and refined many forms of pottery and furniture to a perfection unsurpassed. Today we are witnessing the influence of these forms in our own marketplace.

This raises a number of lively questions that might be asked:

1. Is the current or rather recurrent interest in Chinese furniture a passing fad or based on something more permanent? What are the qualities of Chinese design that make it go so well with contemporary efforts in architecture as well as furniture?

2. What are the elements of Chinese architecture that are readily apparent in the better publicized Japanese houses? What do the Chinese homes have that the Japanese do not? What are some features of Chinese architecture that have meaning and significance for our own in the U.S.?

3. What does a comparison of the natural wealth and resources of China and the U.S. reveal in regard to the high and rich standards of both their living possibilities?

4. How has Japanese austerity influenced its architecture, furniture and general design for living?

Just considering these questions will make the student aware of the social and philosophical background to what might otherwise be considered "pure" design and give him the basis of an approach to the design of other periods and countries. Unfortunately there is not too much available in written form to help him:

Chinese Domestic Furniture by Gustav Ecke, published in Peking in 1944, is the classic work on this subject and is lavishly illustrated. Study the sculptural lines, the exquisite joinery, the relative simplicity (particularly in northern China) of the pieces shown.

Chinese Houses and Gardens by Henry Inn and S. C. Lee takes up architecture and landscaping. A definitive work is still to be done on both subjects, but this might provide an introduction in the meantime.

MOVIES OF THE PAST

By CECILE STARR

With your own collection of old-time movies the past lives again in your living room—Lillian Russell and Lillian Gish, Teddy Roosevelt and W. C. Fields, forever yours on your home projector

If I offered you motion picture glimpses of Lincoln or Jefferson or Washington, would you be apt to complain that the camera quality was poor? If on film you could see the great western plains as they looked two hundred years ago, would it matter if the scenes were jerky?

If you could see an actual cinematic record of the performance of an ancient Greek play, or Cleopatra really floating down the Nile, would you pass them up for something more truly modern? Chances are that you wouldn't be so picayune. Then why not open your eyes and your heart to the wonderful old-fashioned movies that are available?

Motion pictures date from the middle 1890's, and a remarkable selection of the early ones is still preserved. And of course in years to come, their value will multiply. Your children and their children will want to hand them down to each new generation.

If there is an ounce of nostalgia or curiosity in you, you'll find a number of wonderful items in the selection I've rounded up this month. All are available for 16mm rental and purchase (some also for 8mm purchase), and all are surprisingly inexpensive.

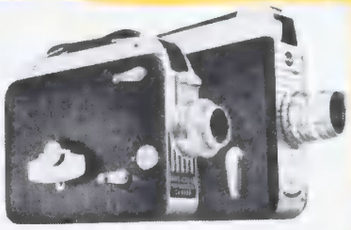
As a starter, try two enticing round-ups of famous personalities of the past. "Yesterday Lives Again" features, among others, the fabulous Lillian Russell, tenor Enrico Caruso, Buffalo Bill Cody, President McKinley's second inauguration (1900) and an early flight of the Wright Brothers. In "Gay Nineties Live Again" you'll see incomparable Sarah Bernhardt, smiling Teddy Roosevelt on horseback with his Rough Riders, inventor Thomas Edison, hectic horse-and-buggy traffic in New York City and, as an added distraction, beautiful girls parading in their daring bathing suits.

Historically the films wander into the early decades of the twentieth century, with informal scenes from the lives of Germany's Kaiser Wilhelm, Russia's pre-revolutionary Czar and pre-World War I President Wilson. Both productions are released by Castle Films, and are available from all leading film dealers. (For further information about the availability of films mentioned, see the conclusion of this article.)

Spanning the half-century is Castle's "Flying Action," a collection of old and current newsreel shots showing the development of aviation from the Wright Brothers' primitive biplane, to the machine-gunners of World War I and finally to today's record-breaking jets—with some up-in-the-air comedy scattered throughout. It's something the children will love and learn from.

"Man Against Mt. Everest" is not what you might think, but it's still an exciting film to own. Although the catalog information about the film does not come out and say so, it is a record of the Swiss expedition of 1952—unsuccessful, but certainly an exciting affair for those who participated.

Still up-to-date with current history is Castle's "Coronation of Queen Elizabeth," and you don't have to worry about its being an earlier film of an earlier queen of the same name. This is a ten-minute record edited from newsreel footage, an impressive event that your family may want to own and cherish.



Miscellaneous news-clips are pulled together in Castle's yearly News Parade series, starting back in 1938 and continuing through to the present. The 1954 issue will appear at the end of this month. National and international political events are featured in each of the films, and a detailed (but not inclusive) breakdown can be found for each in the latest Castle catalog. Highlights cover Chamberlain's signing of the Munich Pact, the bombing of Warsaw, Hitler at Compiègne, Roosevelt and Churchill drafting the Atlantic Charter, MacArthur's invasion of the Philippines, Franklin Roosevelt's funeral procession, Truman's inauguration, the wedding of Elizabeth and Phillip, the Berlin air lift, Kefauver's crime probe, Eisenhower's victory for the presidency.

The incidents are of unequal significance—some are only passing sensationalism. But there is enough valid content to warrant thoughtful memory from adults and to alert interest from the younger generation. There are seventeen ten-minute films in the series thus far, and you'll want to preview and select them individually to be sure you're getting what you want, no more and certainly no less.

ALL the films mentioned thus far are Castle productions, about ten minutes long, and available for 8mm and 16mm projectors. Price for 8mm purchase is $5.95 each. A 16mm sound version is sold at $21.75—but if you take my advice, you'll get the silent 16mm version at $9.75 each. The moving picture is what you're interested in, and to be truthful, the sound tracks on these amount to little more than stereotyped comments and canned music. Printed titles in the silent versions are quite satisfactory in identifying people and places, and you can buy twice as many films for the same amount of money. Remember, whenever there is a choice of silent or sound versions, ask yourself if the sound really contributes to the film or is it only a "filler"? In the case of these films, I'm sure you'll find the answer easily apparent.

P. S. You can also investigate the Headline Editions of Castle Films—condensed tidbits from each film, running about two minutes long, in 8mm ($1.95) and 16mm ($2.95).

Digging into the past, you can find films on every subject under the sun. And you don't have to be an aficionado to be entranced by the fantastic capework of the great Spanish bullfighter Manolete, who died only a few years ago. In these movie shots (which incidentally are among the very few ever taken of him in action), you will see an unbelievable show of precision and daring. This film, "Death in the Arena," is surely a collector's item. Released by Sterling Films, it runs about ten minutes and costs $22.50 to purchase—16mm sound only.

Two famous personalities of the outdoor world are shown in unique releases by Film Classic Exchange. "Luther Burbank" (about ten minutes, silent) shows the famed botanist informally at work; 16mm purchase $30, rental $2. "In a Naturalist's Garden," reputed to be the only available footage of John Burroughs, runs only 112 feet (about four minutes), silent, 16mm; purchase $12, rental $2.

In the vein of American politics, Blackhawk Films offers "The Days of McKinley, Bryan and Teddy Roosevelt," about ten minutes long. Sale price for the 8mm version is $2.98, for 16mm sound (a sensible but non-stop narration) $11.95.

A new series of old-time movies has recently been released in 16mm sound by Film Classic Exchange. Entitled "The Living Past," the series thus far includes seven 15-minute productions covering the years 1896 to about 1910. Rental is $10 for each, and purchase is restricted to school libraries. Even though you can't own them, you may want to see one or two. There are some wonderful views—Fifth Avenue 1896, opening of the New York subway, authentic pictures of the San Francisco earthquake and early fiction movies interwoven among the factual scenes.

REMEMBER that these bits and snatches are not mere remnants of former films; they are complete as shown in the early days of the movies. Full-length feature films didn't appear until about 1915 (see below "The Birth of A Nation"). The first American two-reeler didn't come out until 1911 (D. W. Griffith's "Enoch Arden"). In 1903 "The Great Train Robbery" ran about ten minutes and was staggeringly long for its day. In the earliest days of the movies, the typical program was made up of unrelated scenes, each lasting from about twenty seconds to perhaps two minutes. They weren't considered "shorts": they were the whole show.

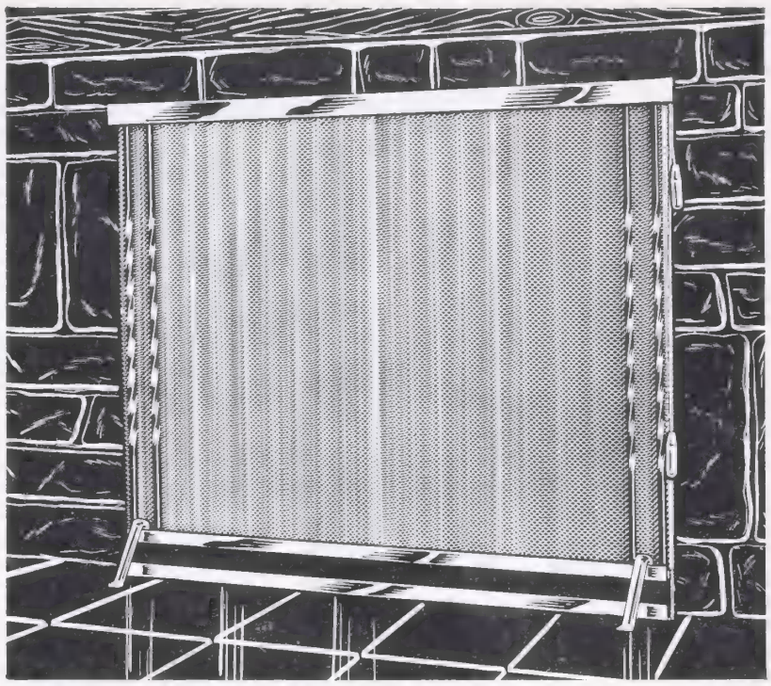
Some of the early story films are also available for your collection of home movies. Granted that they are primitive in style and cinematic technique, many are truly delightful episodes from the past. Film Classic Exchange, which specializes in hard-to-find prints of early films, has a large selection for home purchase and rental. "The Hasher's Delirium," for example, is a 1906 Gaumont cartoon comedy, conceivably the earliest of its kind (16mm purchase $18, rental $3).



"Transformation" is a charming example of the movie magic popularized by the much-limited Frenchman, Georges Méliès. In the film a rose turns into a winsome woman dressed in an elaborate costume with butterfly wings which marvelously change patterns before your very astonished eyes. The ending is particularly amusing in its mild Victorian way. When you see the film, notice that all the action takes place on a stage, the camera and the solitary performer remaining more or less glued to the floor. This is typical of the earliest motion pictures—motion was often limited to waving arms and frantic facial gestures. "Transformation" is about three minutes of silent film and is a wonderful bargain for 16mm purchase at $10, for 8mm purchase at $5.

Other noteworthy items offered by Film Classic Exchange are Pathé's 1906 version of Faust entitled "Weird Fantasies" and Méliès' 1910 film, "The Christmas Miracle" (16mm purchase price of each is $18, rental $3). "The Wizard's Apprentice," although originally a silent film, has a musical soundtrack and now sells in 16mm for $40, rental $5. Based on the popular Goethe story, its cinematic tricks are every bit as exciting as those used much later in "King Kong."

A SELECTION of comedy and dramatic films, dating from the 1912 era, is also available from Film Classic Exchange (and from other film libraries, as noted below). Among those of special interest are "Adrift on a Honeymoon" (Mabel Normand and Fatty Arbuckle in a Mack Sennett Keystone comedy), "Step Lively" (Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels), "Law and the Man" (Maurice Costello), "Father's Hat Band" (Norma Talmadge) and "Two Daughters of Eve" (starring Henry B. Walthall and directed by D. W. Griffith). Each is about ten minutes long, silent and available from CFE for 16mm purchase at $18, rental $4.

films, is a ten-minute release entitled "Great Moments from the Birth of a Nation." Selections have been made from the most memorable scenes of D. W. Griffith's history-making feature film, first released in 1915. In them you will see Lillian Gish, Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh and Wallace Reid in close-up shots which made them world famous. The brilliant camerawork of Griffith's assistant, Billy Bitzer, is exemplified by such shots as the famous "panning" from refugee figures huddled on a hilltop to Sherman's vast army marching below. Nothing so breathtaking and vigorous had ever before been attempted on motion picture film. Realistic and impressive are the vast battle scenes depicting the War between the States, the carefully reproduced tableaux of Lee's surrender at Appomattox and Lincoln's assassination, the skillful composition of the hospital scenes, and the fast-mounted ride of the Klan at the end of the film. It was the first feature-length film made in this country, running about two hours. Today, as when it first appeared, "The Birth of a Nation" is inexcusably narrow-minded and antediluvian in sentiment—but in cinematic inventiveness, particularly when viewed among films which were its contemporaries, it is unquestionably a pace setter. Its many innovations in camera, lighting and editing are the basis upon which movies have been made, from that day to this. The film was originally silent, of course, and an excellent explanatory narration has been added to the 16mm ten-minute excerpts and all for only $11.95. An 8mm silent version costs only $2.98. Orders should be placed direct with Blackhawk Films, Inc., Davenport, Iowa.

IT'S a long jump from "The Birth of a Nation" (1915) to the films of W. C. Fields (made in the late 1930's), but for the benefit of the many devoted admirers of that esteemed late comedian, let's make it. Excerpts from three of his Hollywood feature films have been released by Castle under the titles, "Circus Slicker," "Hurry, Hurry" and "The Great Chase." Sound is essential for real enjoyment of the Fields humor—but if you are one of the unfortunates who doesn't own a sound projector, the ten-minute films are also available for silent use on 8mm and 16mm. Prices are the same as indicated above for other Castle releases. If you're a real Fields fan, you'd surely be willing to pay twice what is asked.

In sum, there is a world of the past to be explored and preserved on film. They are inexpensive enough for you to have your own private collection, tailored to your own tastes and interests. Call it nostalgia, call it education, or call it fun—the fact is that a by-gone half-century is yours for the asking, by means of your home movie projector.

Particularly if you're looking for ways to beat the heat in a summer home. Pay special attention to the Venezuelans' tricks with masonry and tile and with louvered walls that can be regulated to control ventilation and sun glare.

As for getting there this winter, why not put your travel agent to work on these cruises which will call at La Guaira:

Grace Line's twelve-day cruises to the Netherlands West Indies, Venezuela and Colombia, with either the Santa Rosa or the Santa Paula leaving New York every Friday and remaining in port La Guaira overnight. Minimum rates are $450 on season (December 14 — April 20), $435 off season (October 1—December 13 and April 21—June 30).

The Cunard Line from New York offers seven "Sunshine Cruises" which will spend several hours in La Guaira—enough time for a look and a lunch at Caracas. On the Caronia there's a twelve-day cruise leaving December 1, minimum rate $295, and a thirteen-day trip leaving January 4, $320 minimum. On the Mauretania's schedule are a 29-day trip, leaving December 29, $795 minimum; 18 days, leaving January 29, $495 minimum; 17 days, leaving February 19, $470 minimum; 14 days, leaving March 10, $385 minimum; and, leaving March 26, a 15-day cruise also with a $385 minimum.

Also check the Italian Line, for their 1955 Caribbean cruises will probably be set up by the time you read this and are very likely to include La Guaira.

Flights between various cities of the U.S.A. and Caracas are available on the following airlines: Brazilian International Airlines, British West Indian Airways, Delta C & S Air Lines, KLM-Royal Dutch Airlines, The Venezuelan Airline (LAV) and Pan American World Airways.

As a cruise tourist in Venezuela, you need only some unquestionable identification, like your birth certificate, although if you have a passport it's always a good idea to keep it with you whenever you travel. You also need a vaccination certificate, required by U.S. authorities for re-entering the U.S.A.

To stay in Venezuela longer than two days but less than a month, you need a tourist card, issued by a Venezuelan consul in the U.S.A., along with a health certificate, a bank's statement of your financial reliability, and your return trip ticket. To stay more than a month you need a visaed passport in addition to these other credentials.

Once you've decided it's Spain for you, you'll find that the quickest way to get there is by Spain's own Iberia Airlines, now operating between New York and Madrid, on three non-stop flights a week, three new luxury super Constellations, named for the ships in which Columbus also made this crossing. You are, in a way, in Spain the minute you step aboard one of these planes. The décor is all-out Spanish, the stewardesses speak Spanish (as well as French and English) and the menu includes Spanish dishes (along with American food) and the most famous of Spanish sherries and liqueurs.

noisseur, must surely have enjoyed eating in these places, for he writes of them with clear delight. Along with the restaurant's address, hours, days closed, prices and type of food, each description includes the distance of the establishment from a key hotel—an enormous aid to the stranger in town trying to keep his none-too-steady bearings.

Don't skip the introduction or the guide's scholarly section on wines. This tells which are the best wines, the best years, the best vineyards—and which should be avoided. With this in his pocket, any man can be a "winesman" worthy of impressing his toughest customer.

Re-opening night

One of the nicest places you could possibly be a year from now is Vienna, where the lights will go up again at the old and well loved Vienna State Opera House. It was reduced to a shell by wartime bombing and its restoration has been long, arduous, expensive. But now, at last, looking much as it did when it first opened during Franz Joseph's reign—though with modern technical improvements—one of the world's ranking opera houses will again be yours to enjoy.

For the occasion Vienna is putting on a gala Austrian Coronation Weeks celebration from November 5 through November 30, 1955. The crowned will be Vienna's musical heritage, and the program will include, beside such old favorites as Der Rosenkavalier, Die Meistersinger, Don Giovanni and Aida, the première of a new ballet of note, Richard Strauss's Die Frau Ohne Schatten, and Wozzek by Alban Berg. A year away, of course, but an event of luster. If you wish to witness, for instance, the curtain going up on Beethoven's Fidelio on opening night, November 5, reserve tickets at once from the Austrian State Tourist Department, 48 East 48th St., New York City. They will bill you later. The top price is about $3.

Do you get sparks from lamps? Fuzz on your shoes from the rug? Unglued furniture? Lots of colds?

No need, though, to fuss with the family because it seems chilly in the house. Simply eliminate the dry air with a Walton Humidifier. Costs less, with Walton, to healthfully humidify your whole house, than it does to air-condition one room in summer. Less, per day, than a 25 watt bulb.

Quick know-how

Did you know you can have railroad tickets delivered by Western Union messengers; slacks and shorts are not permitted on Mexico City streets; snow-making machines guarantee early skiing at two or more centers within a hundred miles of New York City; that if you are size 16 at home, you should ask for a 42 in the couturier salons of Paris? If not, it's time to start collecting those invaluable booklets in which travel authorities are condensing, refining and handing on their own vast experience:

- The ACF Industries, Inc.'s How to Travel by Train, with every trick from how much to tip to what to do if your baggage comes up missing. Write to HOUSE BEAUTIFUL Travel Department for a free copy—first come, first served.
- The Pan American World Airways newly revised New Horizons, now in a pocket-size, 576-page edition. It costs $1 in soft, $2.95 in hard covers at book stores and Pan American offices. Probably the most complete thing of its kind, it offers 16,201 down-to-earth facts to help you in six continents, and includes such details as the type of electric current, proper dress for dinner, and even information about stores and what they carry.
- The American Automobile Association's Here's How, free to members from the International Travel Department, 250 Park Avenue, New York. This information-packed booklet tells, among other things, what to wear, and even how to pack for automobile, plane, ship, or train travel. Charts will help you buy clothes abroad, select wines, tell time, predict weather.
- The New York State Chamber of Commerce's annual Ski New York (the 1954-55 edition will be ready early in December), free from the above at 112 State Street, Albany 7. It lists the state's fifty plus snow centers, with details on facilities, addresses and telephone numbers, in case you want to get in touch quickly.

Christmas cruise

Christmas is Christmas anywhere, but especially so, it seems, at sea. For the number of Christmas and Christmas–New Year cruises this year indicates that on shipboard the holidays must be something very special! Your travel agent can suggest trips for almost anywhere you may wish to go: Europe, the Caribbean, South America, Hawaii. And they can take as long as you like, or as short. One possibility is a nine-day triangle aboard the Furness Line's Ocean Monarch. It sails Christmas Eve, gives you two days in Bermuda and one in Nassau, celebrates both Christmas and New Year's at sea, and returns you, only five business days later, in time for the man of the family to spend the first working day of 1955 at the office. All this, plus the traditional dinner, decorations, Santa Claus, and twinkling trees on both fore and after masts, for as little as $225 plus tax.

Uptown splendor

With a new crop of bigger and better hotels once more making headlines at the hub of Miami Beach, it's possible you may overlook another new development—the almost incredible boom in luxury motels slightly to the north. These are not just motels in the ordinary or even in the luxury sense. They are, rather, Florida-style resorts, set up particularly for those who like motel freedom, informality and savings, plus a car conveniently at the door; but they're available for overnight as well as longer stays.

Your touring information source may, for instance, turn up with the Sahara, at 183rd and Collins. Still in its first year, this two-million-dollar, eight-acre beauty offers kitchenette apartments in addition to rooms, either with private terrace facing the ocean; snack bar; cocktail lounge; dining room; activities from golf to fishing, and, in addition to a private beach, two swimming pools! No need for you to drive your own car. They're easy to rent in Miami. Some motels even include use of a car, gas, oil and insurance in their room rates.

Another island

The lucky ones visiting Hawaii this winter can, according to Pan American World Airways, tour an island that has been closed to visitors for years; little Lanai, the Pineapple Island, named for the 14,000-acre pineapple plantation on it. This means you can now visit six instead of five Hawaiian islands—and you should. Lanai is only forty minutes and eight dollars by air from Honolulu, has the Lanai Inn, a comfortable hotel, swimming, golfing, good fishing and some hunting.

HOW MODERN ARCHITECTURE IS RETURNING TO THE MIDDLE WEST

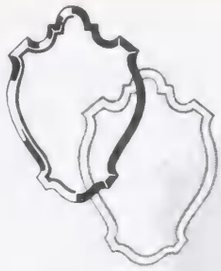
"When an architect has an exacting client, the house that results is not a 'pure' concept on the part of the architect. It is a development of a concept controlled by the nature and the preferences of a cultivated client. What is a cultivated client? It's one who will let an architect go when he's going in the client's direction, and will pull him up when he's not."

As an example of being "pulled up," architect Armstrong mentions the fireplace in the living room as being designed according to Mrs. Stockstrom's specific preferences. "It's not what I might have designed," he says, "and it is better for them than what I might otherwise have done."



THE originality of the house came out of the solution of the problems posed by the owners and the site, the architect believes. The site presented two difficulties: First, it had a hot western exposure coinciding with the best view; second, it fell away very sharply just beyond where the house would be situated.

The first limitation led to the development of a shady terrace behind the wall just left of the entrance. It was also partly responsible for the porch, which can be completely closed off from the living room in the winter. Wide overhangs offer some protection from the sun before it sets; but the trees offer most protection in summer.

The second limitation of the site resulted in the designing and building of the deck-terrace which beautifully extends the living area where there was no adequate ground for such an extension. A look at the over-all plan on page 237 will indicate what all this did for the appearance and individuality of the house.

"To me," architect Harris Armstrong says, "a good modern house is not achieved by forcing a preconceived architecture on a site or a client regardless of the problems. Rather is it achieved by allowing the problems of the site, the client and the materials to be used, to enter into the architect's mind where they are resolved and from which they finally emerge as a design that meets all three problems the best he knows how.

Precision planing is easy for even the neophyte with Perrine's Plane Guider. Your plane strokes are automatically controlled in a way that makes them wobble-free and assures you cutting that's smooth and accurate. The sturdily built attachment has locking clamp and wing-nut adjustments that permit angular planing, ranging from 45° through 90°. Fits any plane. $2.98 from Perrine Co., Harrison, New York, N.Y.

You convert G-E's unusual travel iron into a steam iron simply by attaching the water bulb. There's also an automatic heat control, regulated by a dial. The compact folding iron is ideal for dormitory dwellers or sewing-room needs as well as for travel. Water container supplies steam for 17 minutes of continuous pressing; steam stops when you rest iron on its heel. Iron works on AC or DC: $14.95. Hammacher Schlemmer, New York, N.Y.

All-Power plastic bowls are reinforced with steel wire hidden by the curved rim. Polyethylene plastic used has an attractive finish that looks like parchment and withstands even salad-dressing acids. Florists use the bowls as planters. They're usable as mixing bowls, serving bowls, even for dishwashing. Size 11"x3". Coral, chartreuse, turquoise, red, $1.50 each; metal stand, $1.50. From Azora Studios, Montebello, Calif.

Labelon is adhesive, plastic-coated tape that indelibly identifies anything from freezer foods to film reels. Labelon that's cut to label length and mounted on sheets is a new convenience; also, in this form it can be used in a typewriter. You can get $\frac{5}{8}$", $\frac{3}{4}$", 1", $1\frac{1}{2}$" Labelon; piece count per book is 100, 90, 80, 64, respectively. Green, blue, black or red tape edges. $1 per book. Goldsmith's, 77 Nassau Street, New York, N.Y.

Wagner's Fat-Free Fryer is new and certainly pertinent to the prevalent calorie-counting. The trough-encircled griddle drains off fat all during the cooking process; with this drainage, you get a calorie-count and flavor quality comparable to that found in broiled meats. Utensil's construction is heavy-gauge cast iron, a metal that's hard to beat for frying or grilling purposes. $1.89, available from Macy's, New York.

Stable as the alphabet! Go out today and buy any product of any good manufacturer's brand...ask for the same thing tomorrow, or weeks from now . . . match 'em up, and they're uniformly good, or better.

This uniformity is no accident. Every manufacturer works hard at it because he knows that only unfailing goodness will keep you buying his product. So he's mighty sure never to let quality slip. If he changes his product at all, you can bet it's a change for the better.

"Too many people in the Middle West, and I'm sure everywhere else, don't understand the variety and flexibility possible in modern architecture. Too many still think it means a particular 'style' that must have 'modern' furniture and 'modern' plants (whatever that might mean!).

"The truth is that in modern architecture an enormous variety is possible, and the Stockstrom house, which I think is the best I have ever designed, is only one of the possibilities. There can be as many good modern houses as there are sites and people."

The Stockstroms themselves find their home ideal. Mr. Stockstrom can freely pursue his hobbies of painting and woodworking—both of which he pursues outstandingly well, as is testified by samples of his work throughout the house. His studio and workshop are not an affectation like the old-fashioned den or unused library. They are a vital part of his home life. (The furnishing and decoration are the work of Mr. Stockstrom's sister, Eleanor S. Brown of McMillen, Inc.

And now Mrs. Stockstrom has found a new joy in home life, as a result of the new house. Winters, which once meant bad weather, now have an unexpected delight for her. "I felt sad when winter came," she says. "Now I love it. It means beautiful bare trees with the pattern and design of the branches against the sky. I never saw them before I lived here . . . It's an exciting house!"

More and more people who visit them find they feel the same. And it all encourages one to say that, at long last, good modern architecture has returned to its birthplace in the Middle West, and, from its reception, shows every sign of staying on.

The following materials were specified by architect Harris Armstrong and collaborating architect, Peter C. Koscher, for the house shown on pages 232 to 239:

Construction Materials

FOUNDATIONS: Reinforced concrete.

STRUCTURE: Douglas fir & California redwood. Also rubble limestone.

EXTERIOR WALL SURFACES: Local limestone, fir and redwood.

Engineered storage of small possessions

Taking infinite care with small details isn't as fussy as it may seem. With fine china, for instance, it pays off. This slanting shelf for delicate cups takes more room, but it's safer. Beveled strips hold the cups in place. Plates of same set are placed conveniently near.

PHOTOGRAPHED BY MAYNARD PARKER IN THE HOUSE OF THE ELIOT BLANCHARDS

These drawers for table mats and napkins pull out on simple dado tracks, which could be milled at your local lumber yard. Drawers are open-faced—you can tell at a glance how many of what pattern there are. Top of Cabinet is used to sort clean linen from laundry.

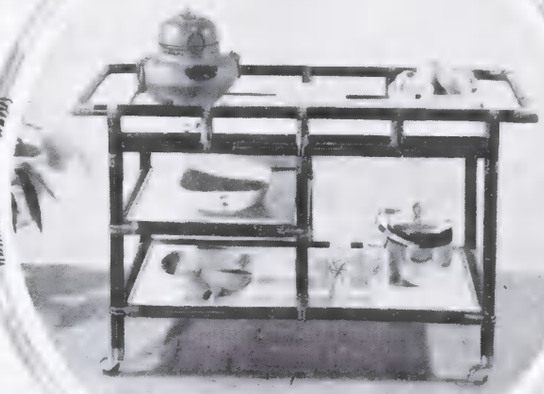
Decorator's Diary

An armchair trip through the home furnishings market via the pages of a decorator's notebook in which the news is underlined

It's not too hard to spot a new addition to a line of modern furniture. But I'm always a bit surprised when I succeed in putting the finger on a new reproduction. Good evidence that the piece has real distinction, I figure, for unless I'm actually on the hunt for a certain Chippendale sofa or a particular French bureau, I tend to pass over most reproductions as something unquestionably familiar. Was sure I could never have seen and forgotten that little oval drop-leaf at Kittinger, though. A newcomer to the Williamsburg Restoration collection, it turned out, and like the other Colonial Williamsburg reproductions, stands out of the crowd by virtue of understatement.

Williamsburg drop-leaf

Its height of 26¾ inches makes it a good end table, or a high coffee table for people who don't like to bend over double to make sure their cups land in their saucers. When the table is closed, it's hardly more than twelve inches across, but it will open to forty to hold all the fixings for high tea or even a light supper. The style is Queen Anne, but restrained and simplified as most European styles were when they hit these shores in the Eighteenth Century. The table is a whale of a lot simpler, in fact, than many of the contraptions that pass today for stripped-down modern.



Couldn't budge Tess Macmillan from her fixation on golden yellow, which is certainly not the easiest spot in the spectrum to take as the starting point for a city living room. Not unless you are willing to settle for eighteenth-century damasks, which Tess emphatically was not. For her draperies, we found a clear yellow version of a linen print that was dignified enough for the room, without being too formal. Then I talked her into letting me use charcoal gray for the walls and carpet. Charcoal sets off the yellow so well, I thought, that a little of it would go a long way. But she was determined to have more yellow on the sofa. And that fabric had to be practical.

edges of the swatch. Discovered the threads were not gray at all, but red and green so closely woven that they looked like gray. Always knew red and green canceled each other out to make gray, but this was the first time I ever saw it happen before my eyes in a tiny swatch of fabric. Makes the yellows as lively as lemons in a black bowl, but each "chip" has enough of the synthetic gray woven into it to make it as practical as a battleship.

Can't remember when I've seen a naturalistic floral pattern with as much life to it as Birge's "Forsythia." Most of those real-as-a-photograph florals give you about as much feeling of nature and the outdoors as you'd get from an old dusteloth. But whoever designed this wallpaper with its curling white-tipped yellow blossoms and scattered green leaves evidently r members what it feels like to wak up and find it's spring. The re dish-brown branches are arrange in a way that gives the design strong vertical feeling and th background is just what it ough to be—a clear receding gray. Use it to paper a low-ceilinged dinin room in an old house in Stamfor where I had intended to put a do umentary. But "Forsythia" did s much for the room—raised th ceiling, spattered the walls wit sunlight—that I didn't regret fo going authenticity. A documentar could hardly make a more becon ing background for the pine an maple antiques.

Was well aware that linoleum ha traveled a long way from the kitch en over the past ten years, but guess I didn't realize quite how fa Had been glum all summer over th prospect of placing Louise Fuller elegant French antiques on a lino leum floor. But when I saw th floor finished last week, I knew should have spared my spirits. Th whole living-dining area of the ne house is covered with Congoleum Nairn's Gold Seal "Sequin White, which is white indeed but so gene ously strewn with every color yo could name that it's neither star nor perishable.

Don't know why they gave th pattern such a giddy label. Doesn look like sequins or anything els very much except a darn good lin oleum pattern. Doesn't remind m of a kitchen either, or an office, o a marble corridor, or an earl American cottage—which prob ably explains why I have no fear it will make Louise's antiques loo as if they had come down in th world. Comes in six other groun colors and I suspect the effect o elegance or lack of it would var considerably, depending on whic color you used. (Might think abou "Sequin Black" for that huge re ception hall in Mrs. Elgar's apart ment.)

For the bedrooms, Louise tells me, the architect has ordered Gold Seal Vinyltile which she and Ed plan to lay themselves (saving money for new furniture, she assures me). When I looked skeptical, she showed me Nairn's "U-Do-It" instruction booklet. Had to admit I was impressed by its clarity and detail. Was even more impressed by her samples of Nairn's "Bermuda Hues," clean soft colors with no pattern except a shadowy striation. Couldn't hope for anything more delectable than the light green, the blue or the yellow if I mixed them myself. There are several others, including a streaked mixture of aqua, cream and beige which is confusingly labeled "Seafoam white."

"Blissful" was Cele Thompson's word for the bow-back chair I sent up to the little cottage she and Bill bought in Saybrook. Well . . . I liked the chair and I like Cele, but sometimes her adjectives set me back on my heels. And sometimes I wish she and Bill weren't having quite so much fun furnishing that cottage. They're set on proving you can fill an eighteenth-century farmhouse with modern furniture and make the neighbors like it. Won't be the first time that's been done, but they're turning it into such a lark, I'm a little fearful of the outcome. There's such a thing as a house being too charming—especially if it's too mannered. But since the Thompsons rarely get up to Saybrook for longer than four or five days at a time, I suppose it won't begin to pall right away.

They're "blissful" about the bow-back chair because they're sure it's bound to confound their antique-looking friends. Can't help reminding them of a Windsor. At the same time it's so obviously not a Windsor that the first sight of it is likely to be quite startling. Has a back of spindles set into a top rail that's bent into a big bow, much wider and also shorter than the back of any Windsor I've ever seen. Rubber seat and back cushions covered in a folk-art print relieve the natural birch hardness, so there'll be no argument about comfort. Cele asked me to order a second one immediately so they can use the pair on either side of the old Dutch fireplace. Good idea. But she's already gloating over the prospect of telling guests that the chairs were made yesterday (roughly speaking) in Sweden, and came to her via Swedish Modern, Inc.

Carpet shopping is getting to be quite an adventure, now that the carpet makers have taken to mixing their yarn colors like a painter mixes paint. Saw one the other day at Lees woven of equal parts of turquoise blue and charcoal gray. Had that matte-finish look of rough-textured ceramics. Up at Firth's made note of "Sun Tweed" in a sparkling true-to-nature mixture of light and dark greens, dull gold and sunny yellow. Looks underfoot like a sun-dappled, close-clipped lawn. Turquoise blue, mauve and dark brown make up another coloring of the same weave. Combination sounds a little strange in words, but in the yarns and on the floor it melts into a soft heather. The beige version of Highland Tweed is guaranteed to enlighten anyone who thinks a beige carpet is the equivalent of dun-colored. Half the yarns are a warm tan. The rest are a two-color twist (moresque is the technical term) of greige and yellow. Over-all effect is beige—but an uncommonly lively beige faintly flecked with yellow.

Used to be that some stores stayed open one evening a week for the working girl. Now the merchants have begun to think about husbands. Got a notice from Jens Risom saying his showroom, along with those of several other members of the Decorative Furniture Manufacturer's Association, would henceforth be open Thursday evenings until eight. Suits me fine! Not that I have any notion of stretching my own working day, but more and more often I've been hearing the question: "Can I take my husband to see it?" And more and more often a job is held up for weeks until the man who works in Wall Street can snatch a couple of hours to go look at the proposed sofa. The day is over when Mr. Babbitt waved a check at Mrs. Babbitt and said, "Get anything you like, dear." And a good thing too! It's so much more satisfying to work on a house in which the husband takes as much interest as his wife.

Find for the future: that little "Charleton" desk lamp at Abels, Wasserberg. As conventional as they come in shape: straight stem set in flat base and arching forward at top to hold down-light fixture and cone-shaped shade. It's the materials that make it appealing: marble (for the base), brass and black lacquer. Shade is black lacquer embellished with teardrop design. Would make friends quickly with almost any kind of furnishings. Keep in mind for someone who wants to give someone else a desk lamp for Christmas. Not cheap—but you can tell that to look at it.

Marble, brass & lacquer

"I know those portraits are too big for this room," Gladys apologized. "But I haven't decided where else to put them."

They were big—36 inches tall, perhaps, and almost as wide as the brief span of wall on each side of the window in Gladys's low-ceilinged dining room. But they were in perfect keeping with the documentary wallpaper and early American antiques. What's more, they were just what saved the room and everything in it from looking dinky. So I talked her out of moving them, I hope. Wondered afterward why amateurs seldom ask: "Do you think it's too small?"—a much more common failing, and more disastrous. —M. R.

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

By JULIE POLSHEK

Anything made with Roquefort cheese has an extra inning where I'm concerned, and I think this is pretty general. These remarks lead me to an unusual Roquefort cheese product, Mike Rose Cocktail Spread. Gorgonzola cheese is blended with the Roquefort, and the mingling of these cheese flavors, you'll find, is an inspired idea. The base of the spread is a mayonnaise-like mixture made with eggs, oil and a combination of lemon juice and vinegar subtly enhanced with spices. Lots of tang and a rich, distinctive taste comes of it all. Aside from the many delicious uses for the spread with regard to canapés and hors d'oeuvres, it affords a "dunk" par excellence for cocktail tidbits. For dunk purposes, a little thinning down is desirable. By way of suggestion on that score you'll find that garlic vinegar has much to offer.

If you don't find Mike Rose's Roquefort Cocktail Spread locally, your order can be sent to PL Foods Inc., 305-11th Ave. So., Nashville, Tennessee. While you're at it, you may be interested in trying the fine mustard relish packed by Mike Rose. It combines chopped pickles with a thick, savory mustard sauce to very tasty advantage. Cocktail Spread costs $1.65 for three 8-ounce jars; mustard relish $1 for five 8-ounce jars. Or for $1.25 you can get a three-jar unit comprising these two products and a jar of the Mike Rose Roquefort Salad Dressing I reviewed in September '53.

If you haven't caught up with Atkins dill-pickled "Tomolives," you'll find they are well worth looking for. But before pursuing that subject, it would be well to tell you what a Tomolive is. It's a miniature green tomato that looks exactly like a small olive and, so far as I can ascertain, the intriguing vegetable is grown only in the Ozark Mountains. In the Atkins pack the firm tidbits have a vinegary tang that's enhanced by the mingled flavor of garlic, dill and spices. As you munch, a peppery quality stealthily comes into prominence. Tomolives are used in place of olives in Martinis by many hotel bars and they certainly give the cocktail a sparkling fillip. Whether used for this purpose, as an hors d'oeuvres snack or a garnish for canapés or salads, Tomolive's tantalizing tang is a definite asset.

Production apparently isn't sufficient to keep pace nationally with restaurant and consumer demands, but if your local shops don't have Tomolives, they can be ordered by mail from O'Donnell's, 1051 North Rush St., Chicago, Ill. Three jars for $1.65.

One of the finest shortbread products that's crossed my shopping path is the shortbread made by McDowell's of Scotland. The recipe used contains 27 per cent butter, which I'm told is an unusual thing. At any rate, McDowell's recipe produces a super-rich shortbread, wonderfully buttery in taste and with baked texture that has melt-in-your-mouth quality. There's one called Petticoat Tails, available in 12-ounce and 24-ounce size, which provides the shortbread in the form of a large cake scarcely thicker than a cooky. This name and this particular shortbread form are traditionally Scotch, dating back to the reign of Mary Queen of Scots. You can also get McDowell's shortbread in the better-known form of cut, cooky-size pieces. Both are available from Ett-Barr Co., 2251 Lincoln Ave., Altadena, California. Petticoat Tails in 12- and 24-ounce size cost $2 and $3.95 postpaid; 15-ounce tin of cut shortbread pieces costs $2.50 postpaid.

The Acres in Oregon create some very unusual products with the fine filberts they grow. One delicious variety, perfect for serving with demitasse, has a mint-flavored coating; a second variety has spicy cinnamon flavoring in its coating. For the cocktail tray, there's a filbert pungently flavored with smoke and a type enriched in a way that makes the nut meat taste French-fried. In all four varieties, you get the benefit of an unusual toasting method developed by The Acres; it gives the nut meats themselves a rich, distinctive taste and delightful crispness. They reach you in vacuum-packed tins that preserve their fresh-packed goodness. It's also pertinent to add that the filberts are obviously at peak freshness when packed and extra-large in size. An assortment of the four flavored-filberts (7-ounce tins) can be had for $4.95 prepaid; a single tin of the desired flavor, for $1.25 prepaid. The address of the Acres is Route 5, Oregon City, Oregon.

Splurging is the order of the day where holiday entertaining is concerned. By way of cocktail fare well worth a wee dent in the budget, I submit the superfine Van Smirren patés from England. There are six interesting varieties to choose from, all of them smoked. A paté made of smoked anchovies heads the list where my personal preference is concerned. Another variety is made from smoked kipper. In addition to these pungent varieties, there are patés made of crabmeat, rainbow trout, shrimp and baby shrimp.

A box containing the assortment is the kind of gift that would ring a bell with any epicure on your list. On that score, it's pertinent to add that the jars are most attractively labeled and done up in pleated cellophane. Mail delivery of Van Smirren smoked patés is available from Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York. Their postpaid price for the assorted six is $5.25. In "open stock," the cost of three 1-ounce jars of any variety is $2.75 postpaid.

"Herbs Every Month" is an interesting food-gift idea dreamed up by Anderson Farm. Mr. Anderson, who is quite a culinary adventurer and epicure, rightly thinks that any male recipient sharing his own food interests would get a bang out of such a gift. The over-all price of $9.75 includes mixed herbs, herb mustard, herb salt, wine-herb meat sauce, wild garlic vinegar, spiced French dressing, Roman spice herbs, herbed French dressing, herbed cocktail sauce, garlic-herb salt, poultry seasoning, hot herb mustard. They reach the recipient in that order, one a month starting with December. With that first mailing goes a note indicating that you're the sender, what's to follow and a recipe book. There isn't space to elaborate on the products themselves, unfortunately, but each and every one of them is of top-drawer caliber and unusual in nature.

By way of a small gift for food fanciers, Anderson Farm has a "Mustard Tray," which provides a jar of herb mustard and one of hot herb mustard. The pair cost $1.50. The ordering address for these Anderson products is Anderson Farm, Tinicum, Pa.

No pre-holiday treatise on food would be complete without bringing fancy cookies into the spotlight. The ones I have in mind are the European-style baked confections made by Hady's of California. One of their fine delicacies is a luscious creation called Parisian Rum Cakes. They have savory batter, rich as all-get-out, supplemented with nuts and candied fruits; all of this is pungently rum-soaked and topped off with mocha icing.

Chewy almond-macaroon pretzels are another delicious Hady specialty. Spices and cocoa, subtly used, give the delicately flavored macaroon a delightful taste.

There's also a Lebkuchen made from an age-old Nuremberg recipe that's one of the finest cakes of its kind I've ever found. The spicy batter has a buttery quality, a lavish amount of fruits and nuts. The decorative cakes can be had both in dainty tea-size and in a large size. Either type costs $1.85 for a 16-ounce tin, and this price also applies to Parisian Rum Cakes. The almond-macaroon pretzels, per 12-ounce tin, cost $1.35. These prices are all prepaid.

Hady's Royal Gourmet Gift Pack may also interest you. The sumptuous array contains the four varieties described along with tins of Hady cinnaroons, almond-marzipan potatoes, Basler lekerli, Old World butter cookies, Bavarian Pfeffernüsse and walnuts tastily coated with sugar and cocoa.

All told, there are 114 ounces of goodies, attractively packed, for $15 prepaid. Hady's address is 129 West Third Street, Los Angeles 13, California.

For decorating cakes and cookies that you make at home, there's a Sue Ann product that supplies ready-to-use icing in plastic squeeze-tubes. The icing emerges through a cut-out in the dispensing spout that molds it into decoratively formed ribbon. You can get Cocktail Delight Icing in mint, chocolate, pink and vanilla. The flavor assortment also provides an assortment of designs in the dispensing cap, and caps can be used interchangeably on the tubes. Each tube supplies 2¼ ounces of sugar icing that's very tasty. B. Altman & Co., Fifth Ave. at 34th St., New York, can supply Cocktail Delight Icing by mail. The price of four tubes is $1.70, plus mailing cost.

There's a new concord-grape catsup on the market, made from an old New England recipe that gives you the rich, natural flavor of the fruit itself. Spice is used with a light hand and the sugar content is also kept low to preserve the grape's tangy flavor. Aside from the flavor benefits of the low sugar content, it keeps down Grap-Serv's calorie count. Those concerned with calorie-counting will be interested to know that there's only an 8-calorie penalty per tablespoon. Grap-Serv is also made in a dietetic version, sweetened with Sucaryl; only 6 calories per tablespoon in this one. You'll find the catsup makes an interesting ham-glaze and a tasty spread for sandwiches that even the youngsters will enjoy.

Mail shipment of Grap-Serv can be obtained from B. Altman & Co., New York. The price for 3 bottles is $1.39, plus shipping cost.

Also pertinent to the subject of interesting ways to treat meats is a superb Kettle Cove sauce that blends shredded orange peel, full-bodied red wine and a modicum of sugar. It's an ingredient combination that enhances ham and duck in delectable fashion, whether used for basting purposes or as a sauce. It also lends itself to dessert use. Served with cream cheese and crackers; and I found it a delightful addition to cottage cheese used to stuff avocado pear. Kettle Cove Orange-Burgundy Sauce is available in most fine food shops, or it can be procured by mail from Kettle Cove Industries, Manchester, Mass. The price for 3 half pint jars is $2.85 postpaid.

A Cheese of All Nations basket is a gift idea certain to please the recipient. Cheese products of eight European countries are represented in the 17 assorted cheeses; there's a whole Edam cheese, Norway's popular Karvi cheese spread, a Gouda cheese from Holland, along with some interesting Gruyère varieties from various countries. The handsome basket, 18 inches in diameter, is also imported and when empty it makes an attractive container for fruit, popcorn or what you will. The postpaid price is $8.50 and the ordering source is Amy Abbott, 344 West 52nd St., New York 19, N. Y.

A new import from Canada provides fine beefsteak, supplemented with sliced mushrooms and gravy. It's one of the best ready-to-use meat dishes I've encountered; there's meat enough for two portions, and it's expertly prepared. With a meat course such as this and the Simplot Instant Mashed Potatoes I told you about a few months back, any meal emergency can be met in a twinkling. Select Steak with Gravy and Mushrooms is available by mail from Gimbels, Herald Square, New York. The 1-pound cans cost $1.49, plus mailing cost. (Minimum order, $3.)

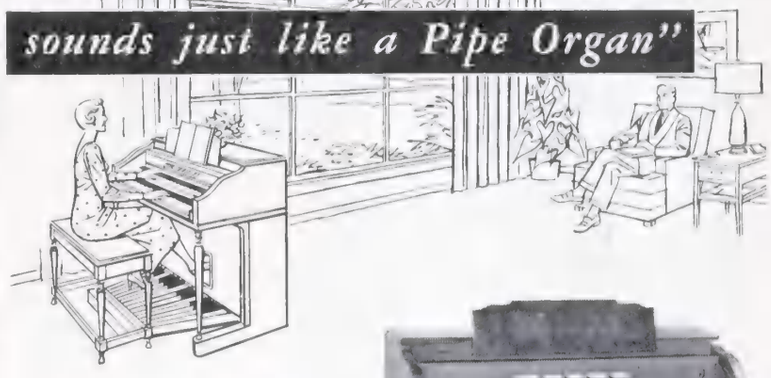
Jordan's superb Virginia ham is now available in boned form, an ideal way to buy it for buffet parties. The boned ham is pressed and molded into rectangular shape that can be easily and economically sliced by machine or knife. This is rich, rich ham that should be sliced paper-thin and that, of course, means that it goes a long way.

The ham itself undergoes the same long curing and aging and the same skilled cooking that Jordan uses in preparing their unboned hams. It's a preparation method that gives the tender meat unusual succulence and superb, highly concentrated flavor.

The hams range from 8 to 12 pounds and in the boneless type cost $2.89 a pound, prepaid. Unboned ones are available for $1.89 a pound. You can order the hams by writing to Jordan's Old Virginia Smoke House, Box 324, Richmond, Virginia.

the secret of CHARTREUSE

The Carthusian Monks developed Chartreuse Liqueurs from a treasured family recipe given them by Marshall d'Estrées in 1605. The liqueurs are still made by the Monks who gather the herbs near their Monastery.



In all the world, only four Monks at the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse in France know the secret formula of Chartreuse Liqueur. But connoisseurs the world over know its distinctive taste and its reputation as the "Queen of Liqueurs."

To serve and to give—no other liqueur is more revealing of your own good taste. You will find Chartreuse at your dealer in an unusual gift carton. Also in a tenth size at a special gift price.

at length on how they are best incorporated into our lives without being a forced, alien presence. In this connection the Damon house tells us a great deal.

First of all, we should resist any notion that says or implies that "this year (or any year) is the year of the Japanese house." We shouldn't subject ourselves to a faddish, seasonal point of view in what may be our lifetime environment. Nothing can lead to more chaos in a home than evidences of this or that fad, each lasting no more than a season or two. Whatever we buy—Italian tiles, Moroccan rugs, Swedish glass, Danish furniture—they will go together if our selection of them is based on a sincere liking and thorough, long-lasting appreciation.

Secondly, we should know what we don't want, as well as what we do want, from a particular period or country. If we like a Sheraton chest, for example, we shouldn't feel that we must make everything Sheraton or even 18th Century. If we like the natural treatment of wood or the exposure of wooden structural members in a Japanese house, it shouldn't mean we must sit on the floor when we eat or walk around the house in slippered feet. We don't have to accept Japanese austerity with Japanese lanterns. Japanese austerity is part of Japanese culture—largely a result of great poverty and over-population—and there is no reason in the world why we should inflict ourselves with it. Possibly the Japanese themselves, despite the fact that they have made a virtue out of the necessity of stripped-down living, would welcome a greater abundance if they had the opportunity.

The Damon house demonstrates how it is perfectly possible to surround yourself largely with products of a foreign culture without losing your own identity as an American. To see how true this is, try imagining the Damon house in Peking. It would be very strange there, despite the Chinese elements in it that happen to be characteristic of Peking. The Chinese would certainly not consider it Chinese. And it takes far more than shojis to make it Japanese or even Japanesque.

There probably never was a conscious effort to make the Damon house American. It was just the natural result of designing a house that would meet all the requirements posed by the owners, who wanted all the advantages of American living without depriving themselves of their most cherished possessions, which are Chinese. Consequently their architect used

This is the living room of the Damon house as one looks toward the street side. House here is well above the ground, so privacy is maintained. There is easy access to the grass terrace outside.

This is the street side of the dining room, which also has direct use of the raised terrace. Noteworthy here is the integration of furnishings and architecture and even design of terrace fence.

the best technics of modern building, planning and equipment—characteristic of an American house—with backgrounds and details suitable to the furnishings.

It is worth pointing out here that Chinese architecture, which decidedly contributed to the Damon house, is not only the great source for what is probably most significant in Japanese architecture, but is also meaningful today for us in America, once we understand and really possess its principles and adapt them to our own needs and conditions. (The Japanese, for instance, "opened" up the Chinese house by using sliding partitions and so helped create what is known as the "open plan," merging two or more small rooms in order to arrive at a fairly large one. Thus the Japanese made the most of their little rooms, as the open plan developed in America has helped us to do. Note the application of this Japanese or American principle in the Damon house, where living room, lanai and dining room can be made into one great open space.)

The Chinese were master builders in brick, stone and marble as well as wood, for which they are best known. They combined masonry and timber in what we might call the modern manner. The way Chinese houses turn in on a court is particularly instructive for us today in our search for full but private garden enjoyment.

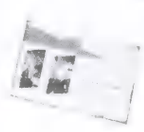
Backed by their country's vast wealth of natural resources and great agricultural yield, Chinese houses show a richness the Japanese could never afford. Compare the limited range of Japanese cooking with that of the Chinese and it is immediately obvious. The same comparison can be made with their respective homes. And as we seek to enrich our architecture and our interiors—following a period of relative modern austerity—we find much more for our purposes in Chinese architecture and furniture than in the Japanese.

If we use what we find as sensibly as Miss Damon did, we will be the better for it. But it takes a real understanding to make it our own. Take the Chinese curved roof, for instance, as it was modified in the Damon house. The sudden curve makes for projecting eaves that shade porches and walks, and protect them from the rain. And in the case of torrential rains, as in Honolulu during the rainy season, the curving pitch carries the heavy fall of water out and away from the house. Consequently, there is more to the Chinese roof than its lovely, sweeping curve, and, once it is used with a purpose, it makes for a sensible rather than an affected and superficial beauty.

The Hawaiian lanai, too, has its meaning for many parts of our country. One entire wall of it can be opened in the summer to make it an outside garden room. It can be closed and heated in the winter.

Study other features in the house we have discussed for similarly usable features here in the U. S., and note particularly how all parts are brought together harmoniously and efficiently, no matter what their origin—Chinese, Hawaiian or strictly American.



Luxury for the LAVATORY

This easily installed figured glass partition brings unexpected beauty to this lavatory. Separating the area from the bath, it helps protect privacy, yet floods the interior with "borrowed light." The wall of light is as practical as it is pretty, for it is simple to keep shining clean . . . never wears out . . . never needs painting.

It is easy and inexpensive to achieve elegance in your bath with any of the many Mississippi patterns. Excellent materials for dual-purpose bathrooms. Specify Mississippi to your architect or contractor. Available wherever quality glass is sold.

Mississippi manufactures glass, only. Metal members available through other sources.

Books for Gardeners

Gardening in the Lower South. H. Harold Hume. Revised edition. The MacMillan Company. 377 pp. $7.50.

This is a most welcome revision of Dr. Hume's famous guide for the Deep-South gardener. How-to directions are clear and specific. Philosophy, though, isn't overlooked.

Dr. Hume writes: "Fortunately there has been great change for the better in the architectural lines of houses within recent years in the South. It would seem that earlier houses were not planned but just built. The height, the elevation of the lower floor above the ground level, double-decked porches with slender columns and bric-a-brac trimmings made them out of place in the landscape and made it exceedingly difficult to plant grounds in such a way as to enhance what beauty they might have or to blot out their ugliness of outline. The change to other styles of architecture is welcome. It is still in a state of flux, but the improvement is decided and marked progress is being made in working out the South's own architectural style, a style that will fit the natural landscape and at the same time provide a maximum of beauty, comfort and convenience."

Dr. Hume also takes time to correct the prevalent false notion that the South is a land of bizarre garden color. A big azalea show, yes. Camellias, too. But . . . "Green is always the predominating color in southern grounds. There are many shades, blue-green, gray-green, silvery-green, yellow-green. In working out the planting of the garden, these shades, their variations from season to season, should be borne in mind. Even the wind may change the leaf color of a tree or shrub. A sweet bay (Magnolia virginiana) tossed by a breeze is silvery green but when quiet it is dark green.

"The size, shape and texture of foliage in the green garden should be studied. These features are important for they are permanent. Other colors come and go in the garden but green in its varying shades always remains."

It's this very greenness that impresses me again each time I am in the South. The shade, too, the protecting shadows that bring so much movement as the breezes blow through the leaves. J.E.H.

You're looking at a REVOLUTION

In the early 1940's Burnham Corporation engineers took on a tough assignment . . . a job YOU, the American homeowner, handed them. In effect, you said: "Give us all the benefits of radiant hot water heating without big, conspicuous radiators, convectors and hot air registers which rob us of flexibility in furniture arrangements!" Above you see Burnham's answer—BASE-RAY* Radiant Baseboard—an idea that revolutionized the heating industry.

From the first, BASE-RAY met with an overwhelming and heart-warming reception from homeowners. People were quick to grasp the advantages of BASE-RAY's low, sweeping lines . . . only 7" high, 2" deep . . its ability to blend with endless decorative schemes . . . its rugged cast-iron construction.

Now, almost ten years later, many thousands of installations have proven the desirability of BASE-RAY Radiant Baseboard heating. Every month new thousands of homeowners join those who already know the joys of hot water heating as delivered by BASE-RAY. Competitors have followed Burnham's lead—the sincerest form of flattery. But there is still only one Burnham BASE-RAY Radiant Baseboard . . . the pioneer in radiant baseboard heating.

The counter-high storage wall

Build them in under windows or along a wall. Wherever a counter surface will add to the room, make extra storage space at the same time

A well-placed storage wall can have the appearance of a fine piece of furniture. Conveniently near the dining table for serving, this wide counter is also deep enough to accommodate linens, silver and even trays. Arrangement of drawers and pull-out shelves increases convenience of such ample storage space. The shelves above counter are backed by clouded glass which makes shining background for the shelves and more depth for the room. Designed by Wahl-Snyder, architects, for the Charles Fishers.

This cupboard space and impressive stretch of drawers bring a look of solidity to the bank of windows above. Long drawer section is given interest by the grooving that replaces finger-pulls. When placed so importantly, both design and craftsmanship must be given careful consideration. Home of the Anton Linstrons.

Chicken en cocotte

GEORGE LAZARNICK

Mediterranean Chicken cooked in and served from a classic copper cocotte which goes into the oven as amiably as it stays on top of the stove—this Mediterranean chicken includes black olives, new potatoes, artichoke hearts, perked up by a glass of Leacock's Madeira. Cuts a fine figure at a small dinner party with melon to start. Then the Mediterranean chicken followed by a green salad and a Camembert: an open fruit tart for dessert: French bread, and a red wine throughout—California Gamay or Chardonnay.

By SYBILLE BEDFORD and EVELYN GENDEL

THE biggest misconception in cooking is that variety means knowing a lot of different "recipes." Nonsense. We mean to disprove this on principle, and in practice with these Chickens en Cocotte.

For the single-handed hostess especially, variety is a worry—a new dish seems to involve a whole unfamiliar new process, and it's not so tempting to experiment with expensive party chickens, or worse, to risk unpredictable snags at serving time. Result: Nine times out of ten she serves her own dependable specialty—probably very good indeed, but always the same.

If she only knew, although there are five hundred chicken dishes, there are only four or five basic ways of cooking the essential bird —roast, pot-roast, braised, sautéed, fried—in preparation for all those dishes. And it's the basic procedure that counts: all the rest are superficial changes. This holds true for everything you can think of—chopped meat and oatmeal just as well as chickens.

Moral: He who masters the basic processes can do anything. With this principle firmly in mind, we give you the pleasure of:

Chickens en Cocotte

A whole series of heavenly, festive dishes—all of them entirely dissimilar in character and appearance, yet every chicken is cooked by the same primary method: en cocotte—a half-way method between roasting and pot-roasting which leaves the bird still very much its own firm roasted self, yet succulent and receptive for the part it is to take. The variations aren't mysterious—they come in these secondary things:

Cooking companions: ingredients that cook along with the bird from the beginning. By serving time they've usually lost their identity and melted into the ensemble of the cooking juices.

Half-way garnishes: ingredients added at the point of the itinerary that lets them finish at the same time as the chicken—to arrive whole, so to speak, without being overdone, yet having given some of their taste and/or substance to the common weal.

Finish garnishes: ingredients that need no perceptible cooking time—added at the last minute, just to heat through. Their point is to be as intact as possible in flavor, texture and color. They are decorations for the eye and palate.

Smoothers, binders, finishing touches: last-minute additions, off the fire, before the cocotte goes to the table.

A happy cook is one who knows what she's doing. It will be a very happy cook indeed who produces this smug triumph of variety, all based on the one, familiar Chicken en Cocotte.

Chicken en Cocotte

This is the key recipe.

A whole good-quality chicken, broiler-to-roaster size; butter, salt and pepper.

Rub a whole chicken with salt and pepper, truss it, lay it on its side in a deepish cocotte with a good piece of butter, at least one-eighth pound for the smallest chicken, and cook it in a moderately hot oven, or medium-fast on top of the stove, until it is tender, basting often with its own juices, and turning the chicken on its other side and on its back once or twice. It will be done when the juices (after inserting the point of a small knife into the leg) are no longer red.

A 2- to 2½-pound broiler will take half an hour to fifty minutes.

A 2½- to 3½-pound roaster will take an hour and a half.

This is the Chicken en Cocotte in its natural state—and very good in it too—ready for your command.

Please note: The chicken cooks only in its own buttery juices—no liquid. If at any time you have the impression the cooking is too dry (i.e., juices sticking to the bottom) put on a lid for five to ten minutes at a time; take it off again when some moisture has formed. This occasional covering swells the bird a little, too.

Oven versus top-of-stove cooking Do it whichever way comes easiest to you. Do you wish to light the oven? Are you used to top-of-stove roasting? The oven develops a more baked flavor; it requires less attention, only basting. Top-of-stove is more like a slow sauté. You have to keep regulating heat so the juices do not burn or cook down completely, shake the cocotte from time to time, watch more: on the other hand, it is more convenient for the handling of the subsequent cookery. There is no reason, of course, against starting in the oven, then finishing and serving from top of stove.

In all the variations that follow, you're still doing a Chicken en Cocotte.

The chicken: Always young, broiler-to-roaster size, as specified.

The basic recipe cooks the bird whole. Whether it's done whole or cut-up depends on the dish—the process is the same in either case. On principle, a chicken cooked whole always shrinks less, retains more juices. But a cut-up chicken will add more to the sauce, if that's the crux, or achieve a particularly melting texture. It all depends on the desired effect in taste and texture.

The utensil: Chickens en Cocotte need a deepish thick-bottomed casserole or pan. If it's handsome and can be used for serving too, so much the better. Earthenware of course is fine, but it must be the kind of earthenware that stands normal hard top-of-stove cooking. Glass and heavy enamelware are both good; (cast-iron is harder to handle and retains too much heat for some of the sauces); a really heavy aluminum or bottom reinforced copper saucepan, chef's sauteuse style (wide, with about a two-inch rim, and a long handle) is agreeable and easy to work with.

Chicken Farmer's Style

This very simple recipe produces a whole chicken cooked in butter and its own juices in a deep cocotte with whole small onions, new potatoes and tender nuggets of streaky salt pork. Serves four.

A good-sized roasting chicken
4-6 ounces of parboiled salt pork or bacon
16-20 small round onions
20-24 small new potatoes
Butter, parsley, salt and pepper

While your whole trussed chicken is sizzling at good-medium pace in its cocotte, parboil a piece of salt pork in gently boiling water for about five minutes, then drain, and cut into not-too-small strips or dice.

pan, then toss in this diced pork and some small whole raw onions and potatoes, both peeled, and let them all take on a little color together. Add this garnish to your chicken, now put on a lid, let them cook together until all is done. (The garnish will take about 25-35 minutes of medium-slow cooking, so work out the time it should go in. With an over-three-pound roaster, add garnish after about 50 minutes.)

Sprinkle thickly with freshly chopped parsley and serve sizzling hot.

Accompany with a pleasant red wine—a California Chardonnay and a sharp green salad.

A Mediterranean Chicken

Whole small chickens or quartered chicken cooked quickly with bland black olives, new potatoes and artichoke hearts, picked up with a touch of tomato-concentrate and a glass of Madeira—a variation with a bracing taste, though light. Cuts a fine figure at a small dinner party. Serve four to six.

One 3-lb. or two 2½ lb. chickens
16-24 small new potatoes
25-35 pitted ripe black olives (bland or oily)
A #1 jar or can of artichoke hearts
2 teaspoonfuls tomato paste
A small wineglassful of Madeira o brown sherry
Butter, and a little olive oil

For this you may have your chicken cut into quarters before cooking, or if small cook them whole. Cook them en cocotte, i.e. by putting them with some butter into a deepish pan or casserole and cooking them uncovered until tender. Top-of-stove is most convenient for this recipe. The chicken here ought to be on the well-cooked side and should take, therefore, about 50 minutes, if quartered, to an hour and a quarter if whole.

While it is cooking, prepare the garnish. Scrape the skin off some very small new potatoes and toss them in foaming butter just long enough to color them very lightly.

When the chicken has cooked for half an hour, stir two teaspoonfuls of tomato paste into the chicken juices, then add the garnish, your potatoes, and two to three dozen pitted, ripe black olives. Now put on a lid, and go on cooking for another 20 minutes or so until the potatoes and the chicken are done.

A few minutes before you are ready to serve, add the finish-garnish: some drained canned artichoke hearts (very good canned—easy to find, and unlike fresh ones, no work and comparatively inexpensive). Give them time to heat through.

Put the chicken on a hot dish with the garnish around them. Rinse out the sauce with a small wineglassful of Madeira or brown sherry, scraping the bottom well, and pour it all over the chicken.

Poulet à la Crème

This is the classical Lyonese Poulet à la Crème, not a creamed chicken or some casserole helped out with cream; it is a rich dish—mushrooms, brandy, Madeira, thick cream—but handled with such nicety and economy of processes, such regard for suitability, that it is perfect. Serves four.

A young roasting chicken
A good handful of mushrooms
A small wineglassful of Madeira
A jigger of brandy
A cup of heavy cream
A very small squeeze of orange juice
Butter

Cook your chicken, which should be a young roaster of fine quality, whole and trussed, in a deep cocotte with a handful of peeled, sliced mushrooms. Cover frequently during cooking, though not all the time, as the chicken should render a good deal of juice. As soon as the chicken is done, take it out of the cocotte and carve it on a hot dish, into quarters or eighths as desired.

Now comes the important part of the cooking, which is the making of the sauce. This can be done very well at the table. It's really quite simple, but it requires attention and should be done swiftly. Remember, this is only a few minutes before serving time or at serving time. Have a cupful of cream, a small wineglassful of Madeira and a jigger of brandy at hand. (The Madeira can be replaced by Marsala or white wine, but the brandy must be brandy.) Also an empty clean bowl.

Now pour off all the cooking juices and mushrooms into the bowl. Put the empty cocotte back onto the fire, pour in your Madeira. As it heats, stir and scrape with a wooden spoon. Then toss in your brandy. Now thicken these liquors by stirring in the cupful of cream. Pour in the whole cupful at one time, stir constantly until very hot, but do not boil. Then gradually stir in your cooking juices and mushrooms. (Do it gradually or the butter in the juices won't be absorbed as it should, but will float in separate ringlets on top.) Let it get hot and thick but, again, don't let it boil. Taste for salt and, above all, pepper. Pull together with a very small dash of orange juice.

Now pour this hot sauce, which should be the color of rich pale gold, over the chicken (or return the chicken to it) and serve at once.

Accompany with some perfectly cooked dry rice, some crisp rounds of oven-toasted croutons, and a plain green salad—Boston lettuce and water cress dressed with lemon, not vinegar. A full-bodied dry white wine goes well with this cocotte, although our choice would be a bottle of Claret or Cabernet.

Chicken Bercy

Quarters of spring chicken in a brief sharp sauce of butter, white wine and chives. Serves three to six.

1 or 2 chickens, 2-2½ pounds
½-1 cup of very dry white wine
1-2 heaping tablespoonfuls chives
A very little shallot (optional)
Butter
Seasonings: meat extract, black pepper, Tabasco, lemon

Cook one (or two) small quartered chickens en cocotte until they are tender. Then put the chicken with its juices on a hot serving dish. Pour into the hot cocotte a glass (or two) of dry white wine mixed with a heaping tablespoonful (or two) of fresh chopped chives (and very little of the most finely chopped shallot), and let this boil violently, without a lid, until the liquid is cooked down to less than half. Take off the fire, and thicken a little by stirring in a piece of fresh butter. Season with a touch of meat extract, plenty of grated black pepper, a few drops of lemon juice and a dash of Tabasco. Put it back on the fire again for a moment to get hot but do not let it boil.

Pour the hot sauce over the chicken, sprinkle with a little chopped parsley and serve at once with mashed potatoes or wild rice, and perhaps a plain leafy vegetable.

Cocotte of Chicken with Stewed Cucumber

This must sound dull to anyone who has never tasted stewed cucumber. Try it. Serves four.

A roasting chicken
2 or 3 cucumbers
Butter
Seasonings: meat extract, pepper, lemon

Cook a quartered chicken in plenty of butter in an open cocotte. About half an hour before it is done, surround it with some roughly peeled, seeded fresh cucumbers, cut into smallish chunks. Cover now, and continue cooking until both chicken and cucumbers are done. The cucumbers will be very soft, though not mushy, and look almost transparent. There will be a good deal of liquid. Stir a teaspoonful or so of good meat extract into it, a little fresh butter, and season with lemon juice and white or black pepper. This recipe calls for rice.

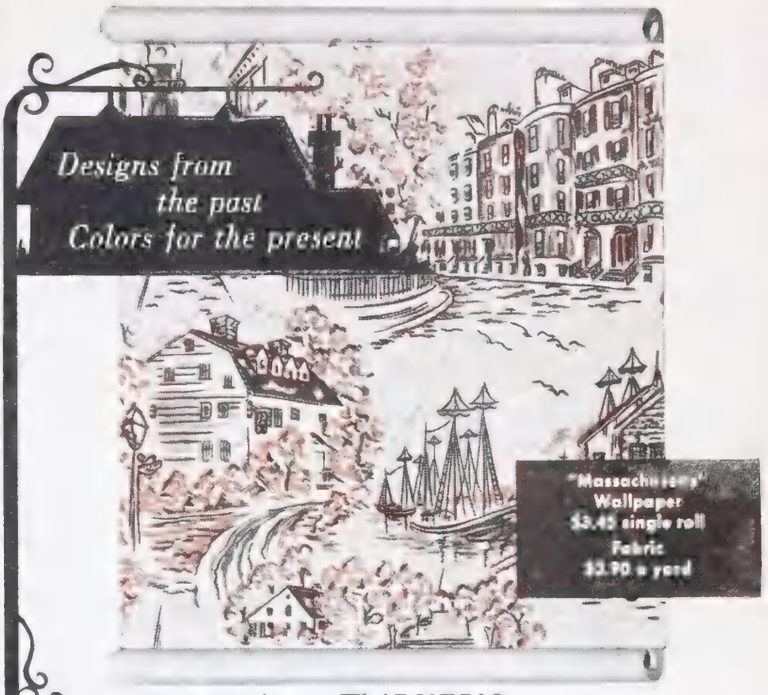
Chicken en Cocotte Normandy Style

Chicken flared with applejack and cooked quite plainly en cocotte with sliced russet apples. Tart, fresh and good, but rather unusual, so be sure to choose your audience. Serves four.

A roasting chicken
1 pound of russet apples
3 jiggers of applejack
Butter, pepper

Cook briskly a whole roasting chicken en cocotte. Half an hour before it should be done, take it out and carve it into serving pieces. Put it back into its juices in the cocotte, let it come to a sizzle again, and now flare with two jiggers of well-flavored applejack. (Liquor, not being de-natured alcohol, will not burn if it is cold, so first warm the applejack by pouring it into a heated utensil—something convenient, like a ladle—then pour the warmed liquor over the chicken pieces and swiftly set it alight with a ready-struck match—spooning the little blue flames all over the dish during the few seconds before they are extinguished.)

Now add a pound of peeled, cored and thickly sliced good firm russet apples, pepper them, cover, and cook everything for about another half hour. Five minutes before the end of the cooking time, stir in your third jigger of applejack and perhaps a little butter.



Eat it with some hard, hot, oven-toasted crusts of bread, and drink with it some fruity full-flavored white wine.

ancestor of this recipe called for foie gras), well worth trying to become a good hand at it. This recipe serves four.

A roasting chicken
12 ounces of egg noodles, medium fine
6-8 ounces of chicken, turkey or duck livers (fresh or frozen)
A jigger of brandy
A few spoonfuls of cream
Butter, pepper

Cook a whole roasting chicken en cocotte, having salted it much less than usual. Sometime in mid-cooking, whenever most convenient, add some poultry livers, as whole as they come. Pepper them; add a jigger of brandy; see that there's enough butter in the cocotte to keep them moist, add more if necessary. Cook covered, and if possible on the slow side, until the livers are just done—a little swelled and still very pink inside. (Test one with the small point of a knife.) About 5-7 minutes. Then take the livers out, now sprinkle a little more salt over the chicken and continue cooking it again uncovered.

Break up or even half-mash the liver into small pieces with a fork, trimming out bits of skin and sinews as they appear. Mix the liver and a few spoonfuls of cream into three-quarters of a pound of hot egg noodles (taste for seasoning), and arrange in the bottom of a deep serving dish.

Carve your chicken into serving pieces as soon as it is done and arrange them neatly on top of the noodles. Pour the cooking juices which have accumulated over everything and serve at once.

Drink a good bottle of white wine with it—a Beaulieu claret, for instance.

Note: No need to worry about having everything right and ready at once. The livers can be cooked with the chicken at any stage that allows you time for preparing them; then they can wait. The egg noodles can also wait a little. Keep them hot by leaving them in the straining colander over a saucepan of very hot water. They may stick together a bit, but if they were cooked just right and not overdone to begin with, they will become perfectly smooth and slippery again if a little hot water is poured through them as you twirl with a fork. Drain them again, of course. Do this just before mixing them with the cream and livers.

Cocotte of Chicken and Fried Potatoes

You are coming home, you are hungry, you are tired, your husband will be expecting something good and substantial to eat, too—and there is that chicken in the icebox, mercifully all cut up and ready. Something should be done with it. You want something good and plain and no fuss. This recipe serves two to three.

A chicken, any size up to 3 pounds
A few potatoes (enough to make a good bowlful or more of peeled, raw, diced)
Cooking fat, salt, pepper
(2-3 tomatoes, optional)

Well then, put a little oil, or oil and butter, or some bacon drippings into the cocotte and let it get brown. On the top or in the oven. Add your chicken pieces, salt and pepper, and let them get a good start.

Meanwhile peel your potatoes, cut them into smallish dices. Dry them? Don't bother—as long as they're not exactly dripping. (Hint: Wash the whole peeled potatoes only, not the diced, and wipe the knife before cutting them up.) Now place the potatoes around the chicken, more salt, and let all cook, covered—rather slowly, but briskly enough to brown, not to burn. Shake the cocotte from time to time while you're getting the salad and the table ready and thinking of a dessert. Don't stir. Let the potatoes stick together and a little to the bottom. Turn a corner with a spatula to see whether the underside is crisp and brown. When it is, turn them all. Go on cooking, shaking occasionally until potatoes and chicken are done. Potatoes will take no time. Some should stay soft, and some should be crisp. Taste for salt and pepper. Sprinkle with a little parsley, if you have it on hand, and serve at once very hot.

If you want to elaborate this dish, heat a frying pan (no fat) steaming hot just a moment before serving and place in two or three coarsely chopped-up tomatoes (or the same quantity of well-drained canned tomatoes). The pan should be on the large side. The tomatoes will be cooked and scorched and dehydrated in under a minute. Put a spoonful of this tomato concentrate on your chicken.

P.S. You may use a cut-up frozen frying chicken and Snow-crop diced potatoes for hash-browns. Place chicken solid-frozen into the oven to thaw.

Chicken Basque Style

A cocotte of chicken cooked with a seasoning garnish of mushrooms, peppers, tomatoes and shallot, cooked into a thick, tart purée.

1 large roasting chicken
4-6 ounces of fresh mushrooms (must be fresh ones)
1 big or 2 medium sweet bell peppers
3-4 tomatoes
2-3 shallots (or 1 medium onion)
A good handful of fresh parsley
1 or 2 tablespoons of cream
Butter
Seasonings: vinegar, black pepper, red pepper

A sweet bell pepper, some mushrooms, some shallots, tomatoes and parsley are all finely chopped up, mixed and slowly cooked along with the chicken en cocotte. This time prepare your garnish first thing. Chop your mushrooms very finely (peel and trim stems but not caps); seed and chop your sweet pepper equally as fine; peel, seed and chop the tomatoes. Mince some shallots; chop some parsley.

Give a quartered roasting chicken a few minutes head-start in a cocotte, just long enough to take on a little color. Add your garnish, and cook rather slowly (nothing must stick or get brown) uncovered for another few minutes. As soon as the garnish shows signs of coloring, cover. (If on top of the stove, stir from time to time.)

Allow a good hour. The dish is done when the garnish has melted into a homogeneous, though not smooth, purée (there must not be bits of pepper or anything), and the chicken is on the well-cooked side. Take out the chicken, put it on a hot, deepish serving dish and keep warm while you finish the dish.

Stir the garnish in the open cocotte on top of the stove; bind with a very little cream. (This binding is essential and pulls the texture together, though it is not perceptible as an ingredient; this is not a cream dish.) Keep the fire low (it must not boil), test the seasoning, and pick up with a drop or two of vinegar, black pepper, a fragment of cayenne or other hot red pepper. It should be on the biting side with, on the other hand, no predominant salt.

Pour over the chicken, and serve with plain boiled potatoes in their jackets, or with lentils.

Wine: red.

A Spring Chicken en Cocotte

Another vegetable garnish—this time the lightest, freshest last-minute addition. A young chicken, halved, on a white, green and orange bed of garden vegetables. Serves two to three.

A 2-pound chicken (We'd call this a broiler)
A package of frozen macedoine of vegetables (carrots, peas, string-beans, etc.)
Half a package of frozen peas
5-10 tiny new potatoes
1 egg
Butter, parsley, lemon

Set a 2-pound chicken to cook in sweet butter in a cocotte. Cover it after the first quarter hour so as to keep it and its juices lighter.

Meanwhile, toss some freshly cooked, hot, drained macedoine of vegetables and some tiny, hot potatoes cooked and peeled in some foaming butter in a frying pan for a few minutes. Not longer.

When the chicken is just done (about 35 minutes) take it out to carve. In its place put into your cocotte (still over a mild fire) your vegetables and potatoes. Swirl them around a bit, so as to heat well through and take up the cooking juices. Correct the seasoning: white pepper, and perhaps a little lemon.

Now carve your chicken into halves, and put them on this vegetable bed in the middle of the cocotte (don't forget to add the carving juices). Surround the chicken with some lightly cooked, hot green peas, and a cut-up 6-minute egg (white hard, yolk not quite set), dot the peas, and the peas only, with sweet butter, sprinkle them with parsley, take off the fire and serve at once.

Accompany with white wine (from the Finger Lakes district, or a Napa Valley Folle Blanche). French bread and a dessert.

endeavour must do. French cooking underwent the influences of the lavish Eighteenth Century and the extravagances of the Nineteenth Century. The first half of the Twentieth Century has been too disturbed by two major wars to have yet declared itself.

To cook as the French do, one must respect the quality and flavour of the ingredients. Exaggeration is not admissible. Flavours are not all amalgamative. These qualities are not purchasable but may be cultivated. The haute cuisine has arrived at the enviable state of reacting instinctively to these known principles.

What is sauce for the goose may be sauce for the gander, but it is not necessarily sauce for the chicken, the duck, the turkey or the guinea hen.

Boeuf Bourguignon

(Beef Stew as cooked in Burgundy)

2 lbs. of shoulder of beef without bones cut in 2½" cubes
3 tablespoons lard
3½ ounces salt pork, diced
12 small onions
1 tablespoon flour
2 cups old dry Burgundy red wine
1 clove garlic

A bouquet of about 2 inches orange peel, a bay leaf, a small sprig of thyme, a sliver of nutmeg, tied together snugly with a string

Salt (no pepper)

Melt lard in a Dutch oven. When it smokes, brown salt pork and remove. Brown onions and remove. Then place the pieces of meat, side by side and brown on all sides. Add salt pork and flour, stirring with a wooden spoon. Add the wine, well heated, and stir well. Add the clove of garlic, and the bouquet. Cover hermetically and cook over low flame for 3½ hours. If the wine and juice have evaporated, add a very small quantity of boiling water a little at a time. Add onions and cook 15 minutes longer. Remove bouquet. Place meat and gravy on serving dish, sprinkle chopped parsley over top.

Suggestions learned from the French

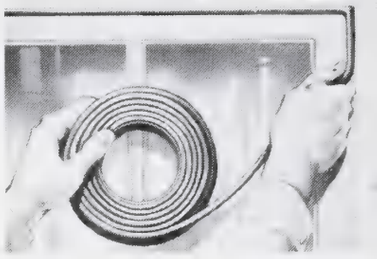
About the use of wine in cooking: Add red wine to beef, white wine to chicken, veal and pork. White wine to sauces made with cream. Two tablespoons of cognac lighted and added to beef and mutton give an indefinable flavour. Mutton roasted and basted with port is out of this world. Try it. Cream should be added to sauces at the last moment, only in time to heat thoroughly, and should not boil. It is tilted in the saucepan not stirred.

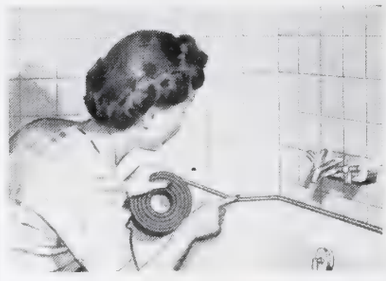
A piece of butter added to a sauce at the last moment, also tilted and not boiled, makes the sauce unctuous and lightly thickens it.

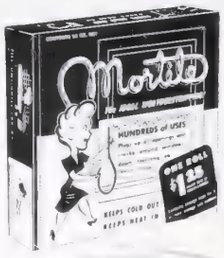
Food in French Homes

Food differs more from day to day in France than it does in the United States, not only in the variety of each day's menu, but in the choice of the menu according to the persons to whom it is to be served. In the United States there is less difference between the choice for the family's menu and one for guests than there is in France. For example, this is the menu at a lunch party to which we were invited at a house whose mistress was a well-known French hostess and whose food was famous:

Aspic de Foie Gras
Salmon Sauce Hollandaise
Hare à la Royale
Hearts of Artichokes à la Imam Bayildi
Pheasants Roasted with Truffles
Lobster à la Francaise
Singapore Ice Cream
Cheese
Berries and Fruit







This copious lunch was accompanied by appropriate and rare wines. There were at table ten guests and six of the family. The fine linen and beautiful crystal, porcelains and silver were of the same quality as the menu.

Hearts of Artichokes à la Imam Bayildi

Prepare 12 artichokes by cutting the leaves to within 2 inches of the heart. As each one is cut, put it into a recipient of cold water to which the juice of one lemon has been added. When all the artichokes are ready, shake them well to clean them in a quantity of running water. Put them at once in a large saucepan of furiously boiling water to which 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon cardamom seeds and the juice of 2 lemons have been added, and cover.

There should be enough water to float the artichokes until they are tender, about 25 minutes according to size. As soon as a leaf can be removed easily, remove from flame, drain at once, and put into recipient of cold water and under running water. When water is tepid, remove artichokes, drain, gently remove all leaves and the chokes. Trim around the hearts if necessary. The leaves can be scraped with a silver spoon and mixed with a little cream to be used in an omelette or under mirrored eggs. Boil 3 pounds of small green asparagus tied in bundles in a covered saucepan of salted water. Cover and boil about 15 minutes or until tender, but don't overcook.

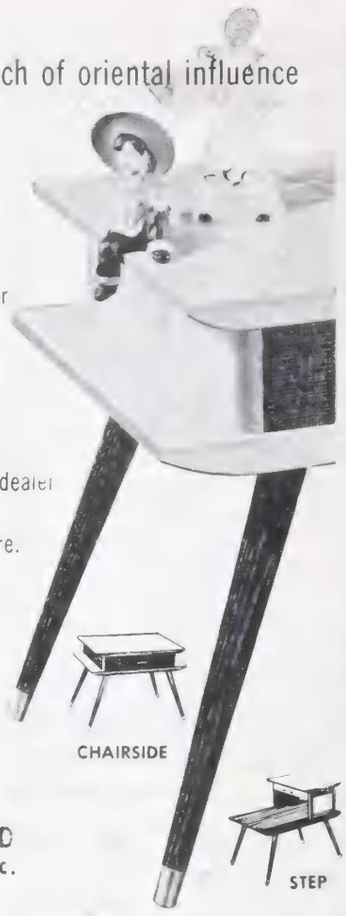
After soaking a sweetbread weighing about 1 pound in cold water for 1 hour, boil in salted water to which ½ teaspoon salt, 2 shallots and 6 coriander seeds have been added. Boil covered for 20 minutes. Plunge in cold water and when cool enough, remove tubes and skin. Strain with potato masher through strainer. Put 2 tablespoons butter in frying pan; when the butter begins to bubble reduce flame. Put the sweetbreads in frying pan. Stir constantly until they are well mixed with butter. Sprinkle on them 2 tablespoons flour. Mix thoroughly. Then slowly add 2 cups dry champagne. Cook gently until sauce becomes stiff.

Cut the asparagus within 2 inches of the tip. With the left hand, hold an asparagus upright in the heart of an artichoke while a wall of the sauce is built around it with the right hand. The tips of the asparagus should show about a half inch above the sauce. Cover the sauce with a thick coat of browned bread crumbs. Pour 1 tablespoon butter over each asparagus tip and the bread crumbs. Place the artichokes in a well buttered fireproof dish and brown in preheated 425° F. oven for 15 minutes.

It does not take as long as it sounds to prepare this dish. The lemon, champagne and coriander seeds give an ineffable flavour.

Singapore Ice Cream



Stir 1½ cups sugar with 12 yolks of eggs until they are thick and pale yellow. Slowly add 4 cups hot cream in which a vanilla pod cut in half vertically has been steeping. Mix thoroughly, pour into saucepan and stir constantly with a wooden spoon over lowest heat until the spoon is thickly covered. Remove from heat and pour through a fine sieve into bowl. Remove vanilla bean, wash the pieces well in cold water. They may be used again. If you do not use vanilla bean, add

A mass of bold foliage complements the important planes and angles of a strong decorative scheme when a fussy grouping of flowers might appear lost and insignificant. SECRETS OF FRENCH COOKING

1 tablespoon vanilla extract. Stir the mixture from time to time until cold. Before putting to freeze, stir in 1 cup diced ginger as completely drained as possible of its syrup and 1 cup not too finely chopped blanched pistachio nuts. Then mix in 2 cups whipped cream. Put to freeze. It is not necessary to stir during freezing. When frozen, take out of mold and decorate with 1 cup whipped cream flavoured with 2 tablespoons ginger syrup.

In France it is not unusual for some man in the family to be not only interested in the menu and the cooking of it but occasionally to wish to supervise or even cook a dish. This raises the standard of cooking in the home, the mistress is spurred to greater effort by a constant gentle criticism. Women are not supposed to be gourmets in France. It is rare to find a woman whose taste in wines is as keen and subtle as a man's.

There are, of course, exceptional cases like that of a daughter who, instead of a son, inherited her father's famous wine cellar. At her table the maitre d'hotel presents each dish for the lady's inspection before serving it to the guests. At a large lunch party to my surprise after carefully examining the aspic of foie gras, she, with a brusque gesture, brushed it aside. What it was that at a glance did not satisfy her is a question that still torments me. She has needed no man's criticism to keep her culinary taste up to an almost solitary peak.

One of my friends, an admirable housekeeper and provider, is not so attentive to the kitchen and not so sensitive to the preparation of food. It is her husband who is a gourmet and a student of gastronomy. He is constantly delving into books for more information concerning how, when and why cooking developed as it did and became what it is. This in a roundabout way has influenced the cooking his wife superintends. A meal in their home may include a recipe from the Treasure of Health printed in 1607 with a preface by Jean-Antoine Huegetan. The recipe is no other than our present filet de sole à la meunière, differently worded.

The Trout

Small trout emptied and the scales removed, cut from head to tail on either side and from the bone. Rub some salt in them and put aside for 2 hours. Then remove excess salt from the fillets and flour them. Fry in butter in a frying pan.

This recipe has not changed in 350 years, so that for the menu any dishes that followed it would be suitable.

At the lunch the salad served was excellent and original.

Cauliflower Salad with Shrimps

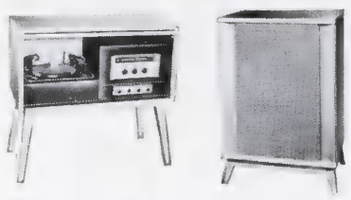
Boil large whole cauliflower in salted water until the flowerets are tender but no more than that. Drain and press head down in a bowl while still hot so that when cold and removed from the bowl it will keep its shape. Place cauliflower flat side down on a flat round serving dish. Place 1 pound shelled giant shrimps between the flowerets, tails pendant. Serve apart:

Sauce Mousseline

A sauce Hollandaise is made by placing in the top of a double boiler the yolks of 3 eggs, ¼ teaspoon salt and a pinch of pepper and the same of nutmeg. Put over very hot but not boiling water. Stir constantly with a wooden spoon, particularly around the sides and the bottom. Add in very small pieces ¼ pound butter. Allow each piece to melt before adding the next one. When all the butter has melted and the mixture has thickened, remove from heat and add very slowly 1 tablespoon lemon juice. When the sauce is tepid add ½ cup whipped cream. Stir gently and serve.

This sauce is suitable with cold fish, asparagus and shell fish salads.

Floating Island



Separate 6 eggs. Beat the whites until stiff but not dry, adding a pinch of tragacanth, a powder that can be found at any good chemist's and which helps in the cooking of the whites of eggs and keeps them stiff. Add gradually, while beating, 5 tablespoons sugar. Tip the mold in all directions so that the bottom and sides are completely covered. Place the beaten whites of eggs in this, gently tapping so that there are no air pockets. Put the mold uncovered in a recipient of hot water over low flame. The water should simmer but not boil. When a coarse darning needle (kept in the kitchen for such use) stuck in the center comes out dry, remove from flame and water. When cold, carefully turn out into a hollow dish. Stir the yolks of the 6 eggs with ½ cup sugar until lemon colored. Add gradually 3 cups hot milk. Pour into a saucepan and stir with a wooden spoon over very low flame until the spoon is well coated. Dishes for Artists

Before coming to Paris I was interested in food but not in doing any cooking. When in 1908 I went with Gertrude Stein to the rue de Fleurus, she said we would have American food for Sunday evening supper, she had had enough French and Italian cooking, the servant would be out and I should have the kitchen to myself. So I commenced to cook the simple dishes I had eaten in the homes of the San Joaquin Valley in California—fricasseed chicken, corn bread, apple and lemon pie. Then when the pie crust received Gertrude Stein's critical approval I made mincemeat, and at Thanksgiving we had a turkey that Hélène the cook roasted but for which I prepared the dressing. Gertrude Stein being unable to decide whether she preferred mushrooms, chestnuts or oysters in the dressing, all three were included. The experiment was successful and frequently repeated, it gradually entered into my repertoire, which expanded as I grew experimental and adventurous.

Oeufs Francis Picabia

The only painter who ever gave me a recipe was Francis Picabia and, though it is only a dish of eggs, it merits the name of its creator.

Break eight eggs into a bowl and mix them well with a fork, add salt and no pepper. Pour them into a saucepan, yes a saucepan: no, not a frying pan. Put the saucepan over a very, very low flame, keep turning them with a fork while very slowly adding, in very small quantities, a half pound of butter, not a speck less, rather more if you can bring yourself to it. It should take half an hour to prepare this dish. The eggs, of course, are not scrambled, but with the butter (no substitute admitted), produce a suave consistency that perhaps only gourmets will appreciate.

GARBAGE PROBLEMS AWAY!

Yes...

Garbage riddance is just that simple when a National Disposer is installed in your kitchen sink. Just scrape all kitchen food wastes down the drain opening. The National grinds them to tiny bits — washes them quickly, quietly, safely down the drain. Works equally well on city sewer lines or septic tanks.

You can put a National into a new or old house — without fuss, muss or bother. Your master plumber can install it quickly.

remember from my early childhood in San Francisco in the early eighties was breakfast food: cracked wheat with sugar and cream: corn meal with molasses: and farina with honey. But after that the first food that I saw and clearly remember was soufflé fritters which, of course, were not included in a diet prescribed for a child. Nora, my mother's cook, fortunately stayed on long enough for me to taste her fritters. Nora left my mother's kitchen when she was nearly forty years old to marry a well-paid workman and she proceeded to produce five or six children. Maggie, the nurse, would go to see her and on her return would tell the incredible story that Nora who had been such an exquisite cook was now feeding her family, including the youngest born, on canned food. She was a precursor.

Nora's Ice Cream

One quart whipped cream sweetened with three quarters of a cup of icing sugar. Add one cup and a quarter of raspberry jelly slightly melted. Fold in the beaten whites of five eggs. Freeze.

My collecting of treasures began with sweets—cakes and ices, desserts and candies—double evidence of their date. For when one is young, that is what interests one most: the rest follows. So this is one of the earliest.

Scheherezade's Melon

Cut a piece from the stem end of the melon. Scoop out in as large pieces as convenient as much of the pulp as is possible without piercing the melon. Empty all the juice, dice the pulp in equal quantities (this will depend upon the size of the melon) as well as some pineapple and peaches. Add bananas in thin slices, and whole strawberries and raspberries. Sugar to taste. When the sugar mixed with the fruit has dissolved, put the fruit and their juice in the melon. Cover with 4 parts very dry champagne and 1 part each of Kirsch, Maraschino, Crème de Menthe and Roselio. Put in refrigerator over night.

This dessert and a Bavarian cream which had a similar flavour from its including the same liqueurs and cordials were early favorites. The recipe for Scheherazade's Melon is preserved in my mother's handwritten cookbook.

One story LIVING IN A two story HOUSE

FOR someone in your family, climbing stairs may be a strenuous chore . . . one that is often prohibited by the doctor. So why not add one-story convenience to your two-story house by installing a home elevator? When you do, everyone will have access to every room in the house . . . with no stairs to climb.

INCLIN-ATOR

A low-cost installation for straight stairways. Folds neatly against wall when not in use. Operates on house-lighting circuit.

"Elevette" Can be easily installed in stairwell, closet or corner. Custom built to fit space. Operates on house-lighting circuit.

Another early recipe has for the last 60 years been known amongst my friends as:

Alice's Cookies

On a floured board sift 2 cups of flour. You will require 2½ cups unsalted butter, the yolks of 6 eggs and 1 cup icing sugar with which a vanilla pod has been pounded and sifted. With the tips of the fingers very lightly work in ⅓ of each of the ingredients until all of each of them has been worked in. It may take more flour, depending upon the size of the yolks of the eggs and the quality of the butter. Add only enough flour to roll. Roll to about ¼ inch thickness. Cut with a round cooky cutter of any size that suits, but not more than 2½ inches in diameter. Place on cooky sheets and bake in 300-degree oven about ¼ hour. The cookies should not be coloured. When done, remove very carefully from cooky sheet with a metal spatula. They are as fragile as they are exquisite. Cover generously with sifted icing sugar. Do not put in the box until cold. If the box has a cover that closes hermetically, the cookies will keep for two weeks or more.

Leg of Mutton à la Muscovite

Chop 3 large onions, 3 large carrots and 3 hearts of celery. Brown them lightly in 4 tablespoons butter in a saucepan over medium heat. Add 1 cup of boiling water and ¼ cup boiling vinegar, 1 bay leaf, 2 cloves garlic, 3 whole cloves, 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Cover, reduce heat and boil 20 minutes. Remove from heat and when cold, strain. Place the leg of mutton in a preheated 475-degree oven and after 20 minutes commence to baste with hot juice of vegetables. It will take about ½ hour per pound to roast, according to the size of the meat.

The recipe for this omelette comes from the cookbook of Georges Sand. Should it not, therefore, be called:

Omelette Aurore

Beat 8 eggs with a pinch of salt, 1 tablespoon sugar and 3 tablespoons heavy cream. Prepare the omelette in the usual manner. Before folding it, place on it 1 cup diced candied fruit and small pieces of marrons glacés which have soaked for several hours in 2 tablespoons curaçao. Fold the omelette to keep the fruit in place, on fireproof serving dish. Surround they can. More important than water, though, is feeding! They learned this long ago. Well-fed plants need watering far less often, because they have more roots and because of a greater efficiency in the use of the water they do get.

STILL GREEN AND LUSH AT 105°

Bugs and blights never have a chance in the Pace garden. This is health insurance that pays off when the weather turns hot. Pest-weakened plants have little resistance to heat and drought—and heat is ideal for a fantastically rapid increase in the number of overlooked bugs.

THE Paces also keep ahead of weeds for the same reason. The day we dropped in on the Paces unannounced, we didn't spot a single weed in the lawn, a phenomenal record after weeks of such burning heat. I would have said a weedless lawn was impossible in the Dallas midsummer heat. Actually, can anyone afford to let weeds get started in the lawn in a 105° area? Once grass is weakened enough by the food and water-robbing invaders, it stops growing. But a thin lawn can't stay green even with as little as one hour a day of direct exposure to the sunlight at the 105° heat. The sun heat gets right down to the exposed ground and this dooms the roots. A thick mat of grass insulates its own roots just as the top leaves protect a shade tree.

The Pace Garden looks better every year, we are told. Visitors are amazed by its seeming disregard for heat and drought. Landscape architect Arthur Berger says anyone can have as good a garden if 7 basic rules are followed:

1. Plan ahead and have patience. The Paces enjoy a stylish, heat-resisting garden today because of years (15 of them) of doing, thinking, and waiting in an unhurried striving for the effects wanted. Your lawn for the first few years may not be the thick green carpet you want, the shrubs may look sparse, and the flowers disappointingly few, but everything can be building toward a fine garden.

2. Plant trees first. You must have an abundance of shade trees, all well established before any garden can stay fresh and green at 105°. You can move in big trees for quick shade if you are willing to pay the initial cost and upkeep. Gardens planted all in one season, though, suffer from drought and water rationing and won't look too fresh the first few years.

3. Keep the garden small enough for you to be able to give it good care even in the hottest weather when you won't likely want to devote much time to gardening. Many well-intentioned people make a great mistake here.

4. Keep the garden small enough so that it has adequate, well-distributed shade, so that there is no large expanse of direct sunlight on any section of the house or the garden. If you want more garden than you have shade, plant trees now in the unshaded parts but wait until the trees grow up before incorporating these areas into the garden.

5. Choose mainly from the drought-resistant and heat-tolerant plants, especially those native to your area. Ask your local landscape nurseryman about these. The choice of species is actually fairly extensive, although many nurserymen don't bother with these plants, for many people hate to pay nursery prices for plants that can be seen growing wild in the region.

6. Feed liberally and often. Well-fed plants need only a fraction of the watering you must give hungry or starved plants.

7. Design the garden so that it is developed intensively. Make every square foot contribute to the look of greenness. Do this by partitioning the garden into "use" areas, each giving depth of focus to the next, making the garden seem to go on and on "with more greenness just around the corner." Supply each area with its appropriate furnishings to further this feeling of "more and more."

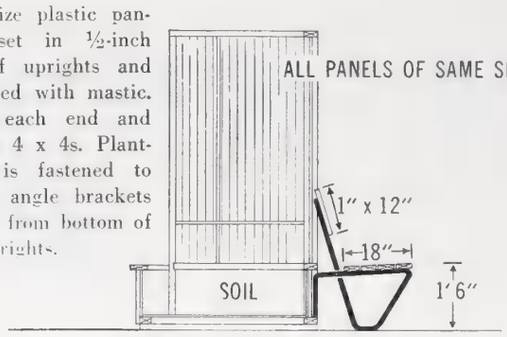
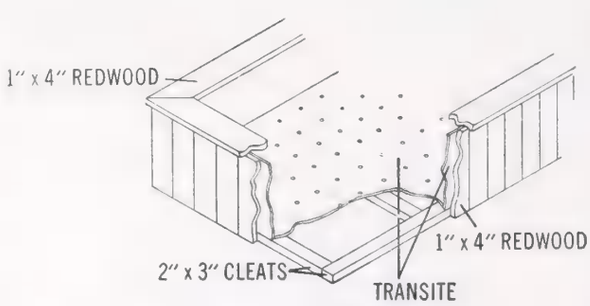
How to build a sunpocket



Free-standing and portable, this screen-planter creates a protected corner which lets in sunshine but keeps out prevailing breezes. By pocketing sun's heat, it increases outdoor pleasure, making even sunny but seasonably cool winter days comfortable.



The seat frame is constructed of tubular steel welded together and bolted to upright 2 x 4s of screen. Seat itself is of 1 x 4s and tips back slightly for comfort. Seat back is single plank, fits notches in uprights.

Standard-size plastic panels are set in ½-inch grooves of uprights and joints sealed with mastic. Posts at each end and corner are 4 x 4s. Planting box is fastened to screen by angle brackets which run from bottom of box to uprights.

DESIGNED BY SCRUGGS & HAMMON, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS, FOR MEN'S DORMITORY, WESTERN ILLINOIS STATE COLLEGE

Planting box is double faced, with Transite on inside, redwood outside. To allow drainage, drill five ½-inch holes per square foot in Transite which covers bottom. Build frame of 2 x 3s first, add sides and Transite lining, then cap box, mitering corners.

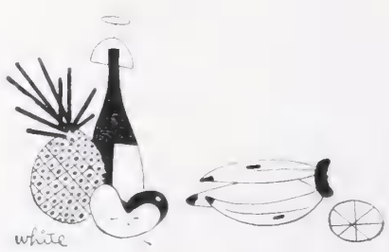
with marrons glacés and candied cherries. Cover at once with this Fransipane cream, made by stirring 2 whole eggs and 3 yolks with 3 tablespoons sugar until they are pale lemon coloured. Then add 1 cup flour and a pinch of salt, stirring until it is perfectly smooth. Add 2 cups milk and mix well. Put in a saucepan over lowest heat and stir until quite thick. It must not boil. Be careful that the cream does not become attached to the bottom or sides of the saucepan. When it has thickened, remove from heat and add 2 tablespoons butter and 3 powdered macaroons. Stir and mix well. Pour over omelette and sprinkle ¼ cup diced angelica over the cream. Then sprinkle 6 powdered macaroons on top and 3 tablespoons melted butter. Place the omelette in a preheated 550-degree oven only long enough to brown lightly.

Omelette sans Nom

Stir in a bowl the yolks of 4 eggs with ¾ cup heavy cream, a pinch of salt and 1 tablespoon grated Parmesan cheese. Mix well and add 5 tablespoons of very soft butter. Beat the whites of 4 eggs and fold the egg-cream mixture into them at the same time as 1½ cups tiny dices of ham. Put in a preheated fireproof well-buttered dish for serving and place in a preheated 500-degree oven for 5 minutes. Remove from oven and quickly cover with 1 cup heavy cream on which ¼ cup tiny diced ham is sprinkled. Return to oven, lower heat to 400 degrees and brown for a little less than ¼ hour more. Serve at once.

This recipe for rice taught me how to judge when rice was sufficiently cooked. Besides this it is an excellent dish.

Rice à la Dreux



Wash, drain and thoroughly dry 1½ cups rice. Put a saucepan over medium heat and in it melt 3 tablespoons butter. Add the rice and stir with a wooden fork until all the rice is covered with the butter. Lower heat and continue to stir for 10 minutes. Then add 3 cups chicken broth, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper and cover. The rice is cooked when small holes appear on the surface. Put the saucepan uncovered in a very slow oven to dry the rice. Cut a veal kidney in thin slices, put in a saucepan in which 3 tablespoons butter have been melted. Over medium heat, brown lightly and add 1 tablespoon flour. Mix well and add ¾ cup hot chicken bouillon and ¼ cup hot Madeira. Reduce heat as soon as it commences to boil. Add ¼ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and a pinch of powdered mace or nutmeg. Cover and allow to simmer for 10 minutes. Scramble 8 eggs in saucepan in which 2 tablespoons butter have been melted, add ¼ teaspoon salt and ½ cup cream. Be careful not to overcook. The rice, having been placed in a ring mold and tapped so that there will be no holes, is now removed from mold onto the serving dish. The centre of the dish is filled with the scrambled eggs and the slices of kidney are placed around the rice and their sauce poured over them.

How or when this next recipe came into the cookbook of a French family, they were not able to say, it was written in a handwriting they recognized as that of a great-grandmother. It is for

Crème Marquise

For three servings, melt 3 ounces of chocolate over hot water. When it is melted add in small quantities at a time 8 tablespoons butter. Stir continuously. Add the yolks of 3 eggs, one at a time, stirring in the same direction. Remove from heat and fold into the stiffly beaten whites of 3 eggs. Chill before serving. It's an excellent version of a common French dessert.

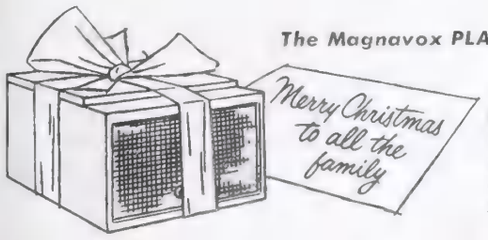
Old Vienna lives again, through Magnavox, in the waltzes of Johann Strauss.

MAGNAVOX re-creates the world's greatest music for you!



Concert Master Radio-Phonograph

LIVING PERFORMANCES are captured as never before on today's marvelous full-range recordings. Yet the finest record is lifeless till the moment it is played on an instrument capable of reproducing the original performance with true high-fidelity perfection.

Magnavox offers you this instrument—the magnificent gift, at Christmas, for all the family. Without distortion or false emphasis—faults of many so-called high-fidelity reproducers—Magnavox brings great music to you with all the fidelity of the concert hall performance. Strauss or Shostakovich, show tunes or jazz—Magnavox phonographs and radio-phonographs re-create all the music there is to be heard.

The Concert Master (illustrated above), a Magnavox AM-FM high-fidelity 14-tube radio-phonograph, couples 20 watts of undistorted audio power to four extended-range speakers and sound diffusers mounted on an inclined baffle. Plays any record automatically. The Pianissimo Pick-Up, with dual sapphire styli, maintains true fidelity through the recording range.

A thrilling demonstration awaits you at your dealer's. (The selected few Magnavox dealers are listed under "Radio-Phonographs" or "TV" in your classified phone book.) The Concert Master is now only $350. Prices for other hi-fi phonographs start as low as $99.50. The Magnavox Company, Fort Wayne 4, Indiana.

How to create comfort throughout the house with Honeywell Zone Control

You need more than one thermostat to solve today's heating problems.

YOU CAN CREATE COMFORT throughout your house, no matter how unusual the particular features your family desires. The Herbert Bloomberg home in Edina, Minnesota (a suburb of Minneapolis) is a striking example.

The Bloombergs wanted a swimming pool in the activities room of their new home! This unusual feature, plus the spacious house design, would pose real heating problems—in any part of the country.

Mr. Bloomberg, a prominent builder and designer himself, realized that no ordinary temperature control system would do. That's why he decided on Honeywell Zone Control.

He zoned their home into 3 areas, each with a separate thermostat system. This assures whole-house comfort. The thermostat for Zone 1 controls the activities room where the pool is located. This thermostat compensates for the extra warmth from the water in the heated pool, and prevents upsetting the comfort in the rest of the house.

Zone 2 includes the living-dining, and service areas. The Honeywell thermostat here compensates for the southern exposure, and for extra warmth from the fireplace, and for periodic extra heat in the kitchen and laundry.

The bedrooms are on the second floor and make up Zone 3.

Today, the Bloombergs and their guests enjoy even comfort in every part of the house. Why don't you ask your architect, heating or plumbing contractor about Honeywell Zone Control, and enjoy modern comfort, too.

Luxurious comfort in the activities room, plus a heated swimming pool—that's the unique combination in this distinctive house! Ordinary one-thermostat systems couldn't control the whole house and still compensate for the extra warmth from the pool and the handsome fireplace. But Honeywell Zone Control, with its separate thermostats, assures even comfort throughout the house.

Spaciousness doesn't upset the comfort balance in this new home. It's divided into 3 comfort zones so that exposure, occupancy and use factors in one zone cannot cause discomfort in other parts of the house. Only Zone Control gives you this whole house comfort.

Cool, comfortable sleeping is the big feature of Zone 3! The separate thermostat here makes the bedrooms comfortably cool at night. And during the parts of the day when they're not used, Honeywell Zone Control makes it possible to maintain a lower temperature—and thus save fuel.

HONEYWELL CLOCK THERMOSTAT

Owners agree that the Honeywell Clock Thermostat assures wonderful, automatic comfort. In winter, it automatically turns down the heat at night for comfortable sleeping, and then turns it up while you're still asleep so you wake up in a nice warm house. It saves your fuel in winter, too!

MINNEAPOLIS
Honeywell
Zone Control

H HONEYWELL

Only with Zone Control can you:

1. Remove wintertime chill from rooms with large glass areas—without overheating the rest of the house.

2. Maintain special areas of your home (bedrooms are a good example) at low, fuel-saving temperatures when they're not in use—without underheating living areas.

How to zone your home

Chances are your living habits may be quite different from the Bloombergs'. So your zoning requirements for even comfort may be different, too. Here are four steps to follow: (1) Analyze your family program to determine how you use your rooms. (2) Review the north-south exposures of your home. Try to have one thermostat compensate for north winds, a second for southern sun. (3) Seriously consider making a bedroom area a separate zone—to provide for cool sleeping. (4) Consult your architect or heating dealer about your needs.

Send for our FREE booklet, "Plan to enjoy more comfort in more of your home." It tells why Zone Control is needed in homes with picture windows, fireplaces, rambler construction and other characteristics of the modern home.

Do yourself proud!...give Sterling by a Sterlingsmith

If it's marked TOWLE, she'll know you've given her solid silver and not some lesser tableware. The well-known fact that TOWLE works only in this queen of metals instantly labels your gift the finest. What nicer feeling for you both?

TOWLE has selected a store near you to carry its fine solid silver. It is bright with gift pieces from a mere $2.50 . . . and you can pay up to $2250. That's another good thing about the TOWLE Sterlingsmiths—they create table glamour for every pocketbook.

IT'S BECAUSE the design we call "Fostoria Wheat" was conceived with a free-hand, easy sort of swing to it, and you can't get such an effect mechanically. Fostoria craftsmen, generations old in their skills, have to blow each piece from molten glass, then cut and polish entirely by hand. The result is lovely, and every piece is ever-so-slightly unique. Whether it's for your own table, or to go with your card as a gift, you can't choose more beautiful crystal. Suggested place setting shown, $15*. In open stock because it's made by The Fostoria Glass Company in Moundsville, West Virginia.

Music for Christmas—not Christmas Music

All music that is born of great poetic conviction celebrates the underlying spirit of Christmas Day

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

I spent last Christmas with a family whose youngest daughter is eight years old. Mimi had received a big toy pony with glass eyes. This gift was the dream of her life. She was delirious with excitement. Later in the day, when she retired to her room, she put a record on her phonograph. She obviously chose the one record among her little collection which would best fit in with her now-I-have-my-pony mood and best express her happiness. Through the closed door we heard the strains of "Alexander's Ragtime Band."

Well, why not? Why should the choice of proper Christmas music be limited? Joy to the world and joy for yourself can—if you feel it—be expressed, underscored, and accompanied by all sorts of music. Any music is music for Christmas. The festival is, in its deeper meaning, one which can embrace all music, because all music is a product of the human spirit and is testimony to the sweetness which lies below the bitterness of that spirit. I have nothing, of course, against what we usually call Christmas music. The carols are pleasant, the hymns are gentle, some of the songs excellent, the jingle bells may jingle as long as they like. But whether Christmas be white or green, whether you feel traditionally about it or not, the important thing to remember is that music fits the occasion. If there is any one day on which music is more appropriate than on other days, that day is the twenty-fifth of December. The silent night should be followed by a resounding day.

I have prepared a list of music that I myself would like to hear on Christmas Day, any Christmas Day. These are my personal choices and nothing more. I pass them on merely as suggestions both for your own use and for a possible shopping list of recordings that you may give to your friends. Diverse as these choices are, they all have one thing in common. They all seem to me to be an expression of that poetic spirit which first conceived the festival, and then spread it through the world. It is positive music, brought forth by men who assert life rather than deny it. No artist of first rank was a cynic. No music of first rank is sour.

Wagner: Siegfried Idyll. This, if you like, is music which is connected with Christmas Day, if only fortuitously. The composition was a birthday present given by Wagner to his wife Cosima early in the morning of December 25th. For many weeks before the day, he had worked on it in secret. He had rehearsed it in secret. And now, at seven o'clock in the morning of December 25th, he assembled his friends at the bottom of the staircase in his house. Cosima was asleep upstairs. Very quietly the musicians began to play. Within the eighteen minutes of this clear work, scored for a small orchestra, Wagner speaks to us not of heroes and the gods, not of epics and travail, but of a father's joy in his child. The music is all smiles and sunlight. One of its melodies is an exquisite lullaby. I can imagine no better way of being waked on Christmas Day.

AGED LIKE VINTAGE WINE

(Smoking alone takes 30 days!)

VIRGINIA HAM

NEARLY 300 years ago, Virginia colonists sent to England hams of a distinctive savory flavor that soon were acclaimed by gourmet and royalty throughout the capitals of Europe. Both the fame and famous flavor have endured. Today, as then, the true Virginia ham is one of the world's delicacies.

Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms, slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, aged approx. one year, has been tended by hand through each unhurried step—as we have done for the past 114 years. For example, we keep hickory fires going day and night for 30 days, while the juices drip and the pungent smoke permeates the meat.

Just before shipment, each ham (in a 40-hour process) is soaked, simmered, the skin removed, the fat trimmed, then glazed with sugar and baked with wine to a savory feast of firm, sweet and tender meat.

Your Jordan's ham arrives ready to be enjoyed, needs no heating. It keeps for weeks and weeks. Traditional for Christmas dinner . . . perfect for cocktail party or buffet.

Sealed in amber cellophane, nested in burgundy tissue in Old Virginia Smoke House box (carving, serving and keeping suggestions enclosed), here is a magnificent gift for those you especially wish to please this year, and a grand treat for your family.

Our hams are prepared to please discerning people, and we guarantee complete satisfaction. Weight 8 to 13 lbs. cooked; $1.89 per lb. (net cooked wt.) shipped anywhere in continental U. S. Please specify whether wanted now; for Christmas; or other date.

NOT STRICTLY FOR THE BIRDS!

A distinctive gift for the friend who "has everything".

You can't imagine the beauty in a real bird's nest until you see these! Done in gold or silver and lavishly glittered they pick up candlelight and start conversation. Each nest, set on a base, comes complete with three bright, shiny eggs and a brilliant bird on the nest or branches.

You'll use them year round: they are completely devastating with fresh spring flowers in the nests instead of eggs.

No two alike—as different as the birds can make them.

Mozart: Eine Kleine Nachtmusik (A Little Night Music). Schumann: Kinderscenen (Scenes from Childhood). These thirteen pieces for the piano are so popular that no fewer than six recordings of the entire cycle exist. Puccini: La Bohème. In the second act of the opera, the friends meet to celebrate Christmas Eve. That however is only a meager reason for choosing La Bohème. A better reason is the music itself, a combination of lightheartedness and sad ecstasy rarely achieved in opera. La Bohème in my opinion is Puccini's masterpiece.

How to buy home movie equipment

By CECILE STARR

Whether you're a rank amateur or an old hand at movie-making, you'll be asking yourself some questions when you start your Christmas shopping: 16mm or 8mm? Wall-hanging or tripod screen? Magnetic sound-on-film? Home editing equipment? Cameras for the children? The decisions you'll have to make for yourself, but to help you find the right direction, here are some opinions culled from the experts.

Price given in each instance is a rounded figure approximating the retail cost; however, many used items can be purchased at considerable saving from nearly all photographic supplies. Photography is such an absorbing hobby that most of its devotees go from one set of equipment to another. Sometimes a battery of cameras is maintained for continued use; often cameras are passed on to youngsters in the family, and often too the used cameras are traded in—thus giving the new purchaser the choice of new or used equipment.

In buying films or equipment for family use, whether for Christmas or any other occasion, I advise letting the whole family make the selections. I am assuming that none of you is an expert in these matters, so chances are good that you'll make a better purchase, one that hits more bull's-eyes, if everyone in the household helps scan and compare the various items.

The Camera—8mm: For the beginning movie amateur, an 8mm camera is the choice nine times out of ten. One reason is price, since 8mm equipment is generally less expensive than its 16mm counterparts. Then too, over a period of years, cost of 8mm film is considerably less.

But, in addition, most beginning and intermediate amateurs feel that the simpler small-gauge cameras quite satisfactorily meet their film needs. These cameras are capable of taking exquisite motion pictures, particularly in the outdoor color scenes which are so popular with home movie-makers. If your film interest lies in the camera's ability to record special events in your family's life and travels, 8mm will do the job very well, as millions of people have discovered. These cameras are priced from an astonishing low of $40 to a high of about $160 in the amateur bracket.

The Camera—16mm: You may, on the other hand, be the one amateur out of ten who prefers 16mm film, despite the difference in cost. How will you know? If you have been an ardent still photographer, and I mean with years of serious devotion to it, chances are you'll prefer 16mm movie equipment from the start. If you ever hope to use your movie footage for any purpose outside the home, use

HOW TO LEAVE HOME AND LIKE IT

By LOUISA M. COMSTOCK

Everybody knows that snow-powdered Sun Valley, that living Christmas card of a place out in Idaho, is Shangri-la for skiers, but it's happy territory for any kind of winter sportsters, particularly for those who like to take their exercise laced with plenty of creature comforts and good cheer. In fact, you don't need to overburden yourself with any exercise at all in order to enjoy the crisp, sunny ozone by day, the congenial hearthside sessions by night.

When the winter season opens this year on December 18th, skiers will be interested in two added attractions. Christian Pravda, the Austrian Ace who was voted the world's most successful skier by the French Federation of Skiing, will again be one of the forty instructors, and a new run, almost a half-mile long, has been added to the thirty that already swoop down Baldy Mountain. Otherwise things are wonderfully the same. As usual, all classes of skiers, including the shy beginners, will find that they are just as welcome on the forty slopes as the champions. There will be people ice skating, swimming, or sleigh riding, and (Please turn to page 172)

Why we present these decorations

By SARA LITTLE

Over the years HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has been looking at Christmas decoration with dismay. We have been aghast at the sums of money spent on trinkets and baubles which, instead of transforming the house into a place of enchantment, only serve to clutter it up with a confused muddle of gimcracks and color. We think you deserve more for your money than this. We think that you should be able to buy Christmas decorations that are practically guaranteed to give your home integrated, truly effective holiday beauty, because they have been designed as importantly as any other accessories you would use in your decorating, given good scale and pattern and correlated color.

So we decided to take this idea to Austen Displays, display manufacturers, whose business it is to create such attention-getting, glamorous store trimmings that people pay special visits to the shops just to see them. We asked them to work with us in designing a set of Christmas decorations that would combine their showmanship, their flair for getting big, eye-filling effects, with our knowledge of what people want to live with in their homes.

Here we are proud to present the results—a varied wardrobe of easily handled, foolproof, color-controlled decorations, usable in scores of different ways throughout the house. We insisted that they be boldly scaled, even architectural, for it is the trivial picayune baubles that force you to clutter your rooms. With our decorations you need only a few pieces to get smashing, dramatic effects. And they are so related in character and color that wherever they're used they link your whole house together in one serene, eye-pleasing unity. They were designed in two colors only—white and gold—because limited color is the secret of impressive display and because these are the colors most likely to fit into everyone's existing rooms. They are unbreakable, lightweight, easily stored, made of pleated papers that fold flat until you want them to blossom forth in their holiday glory.

Golden Sunbursts—and we offer you a galaxy of them—are glittering gilt-paper spread-outs with countless uses. Opposite, see the tremendous effect when just a few are taped flat to a wall. These are full sunbursts, 16″ and 24″ in diameter, cost $2.50 and $3.95. They also come with open centers, to collar a bowl with a sparkling ruching or to frame a clock (right). Or hang them like mobiles and enjoy the pretty play of shadows. Smaller ones are 9½″ in diameter, and 90¢ a pair. All fold flat. Christmas balls by Max Eckardt.

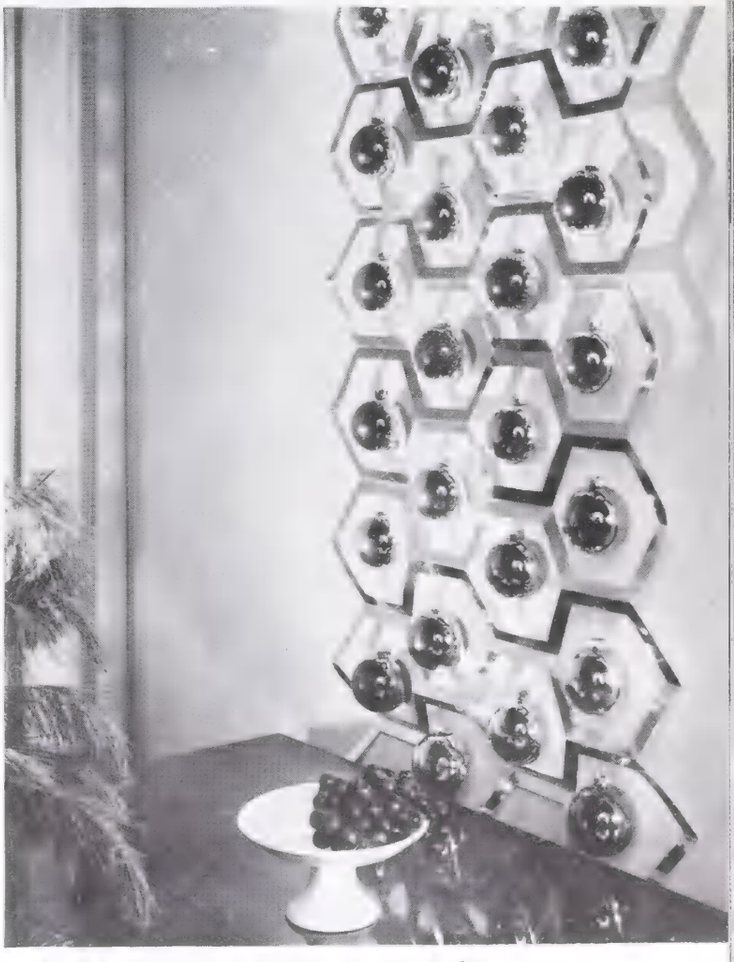
For a country-wide list of stores where you may see these decorations, turn to page 190

These Christmas trimmings couldn't be more versatile

Our boldly scaled tissue paper tree, expanded to a half-round and attached to a wall with cellophane tape, furnishes non-cluttering adornment for a buffet table, above, and meantime decorates a whole wall. Spark up its whiteness with glitter balls. Right, see how this one piece can dominate a room yet leave floor space free.

The golden hoops of braided bamboo are ornaments that lend themselves to as many ideas as your imagination suggests. Here they are threaded with the traditional stairway garland, each hoop hung with a shining ball. Or you might tape them on a wall in a pattern of rings.

Over a sideboard, a pair of large white finials attached to the wall and swagged together with their golden ropes present an architectural eyeful of Christmas, yet don't interfere with the working surface of the sideboard.



DRAWINGS BY HARRY MARINSKY

Spencerian scrolls (above) and S-links offer limitless possibilities for glittering up flat surfaces. Here scrolls are festive table mats. But they're also great Christmas-makers in rooms too small to hold a tree, adding sparkle to dull walls without consuming space. (See another variation on page 132.)

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

The honeycomb, like a flexible glinting trellis, gives Christmas decoration the important scale and impact of architecture. It can curtain a window (left) or cover a wall, held by molding hooks (sketch).

For a list of stores showing these decorations see page 190

Make your Holiday Decorating an Exercise in Good Decorating

Because you work with expendable materials like paper, greenery, tinsel and ribbon, you can free yourself of inhibitions and restraints. Christmas is the best possible time for learning how to be effective and how to create style—at all times

PHOTOGRAPHED BY MAYNARD PARKER AT THE SAN FRANCISCO MUSEUM OF ART

BY ELIZABETH GORDON, Editor

The greatest obstacle to developing a sense of style and a discriminating taste is lack of experience. Learning by doing is the best way to learn. So it is no coincidence that the best-dressed women are often wealthy women. They have been learning by buying, by expensive trial and error, certain principles not readily apparent to the less experienced: the beauty of control and discipline; the value of basic things that need nothing additional; the effectiveness of being appropriate to time, place, occasion and weather.

The same principles apply to decorating. Unfortunately the family that keeps furnishings until they wear out has few opportunities in a lifetime to learn from previous mistakes. That's why decorating for the holiday season is a chance not to be missed. It is a wonderful occasion for inexpensive trial and error. With things like gold paper, colored baubles and tiny boughs, everyone can play with line, color and glitter until an ordinary abode is closer to the heart's desire. This Christmas satisfy those subconscious dreams. First free your mind of the way things look now. Then clear out the familiar and begin a three-weeks' experiment in fun and beauty. Let the principles below help you to start right, right off.

Here are 7 principles to guide you. Prove their truth for yourself at holiday time. Then you'll be ready to apply them when you make major changes in your home

1. The style that comes from discipline and lack of clutter
2. The big effect of big scale.
3. The pleasure of an uncomplicated color scheme.
4. The character produced by a bold idea, lavishly executed.
5. The rightness that derives from being appropriate.
6. The freshness of a familiar thing used in an unfamiliar way.
7. The satisfaction of creating out of the situation at hand—with the materials at hand.

Examples in Good Decorating

3 PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Not another swag like this in their town

This fireplace swag illustrates five of the principles listed on preceding page to help achieve effective holiday decorating. It has large scale. It uses a simple color scheme of white, green and brown that relates to stone background. It is a bold idea, boldly and exuberantly executed. It has the appeal that comes when familiar everyday objects are used in a fresh, unfamiliar way. (It uses white onions, potatoes, green apples, magnolia leaves and wheat.) And it has the rightness that results when architecture of room is taken as the starting point. It was designed and executed by Joseph Copp, landscape architect, for the McBurneys of Claremont, California. Mr. Copp started with heavy gauge steel wire, covered with pine twigs. Then stiff florist's wire was inserted in apples, onions, potatoes, to be formed into loops and hooked to frame in groups of three. Magnolia leaves and wheat were added last.

Pine cones arranged as though they were flowers

Decorating with commonly available materials, such as wheat and pine cones, can give tremendous pleasure to both arranger and onlooker. This one, by Amymay, started with big cones that had a slight curvature so they appeared to bend and bow like flowers. These were wired at their base so they could be manipulated. Eriogonum and pinkish brown weeds were used to fill in the holes. Bits of tinsel on wire were added. Overscale bronze ball repeats the colors.

One color trimmed this tree successfully

Straw, balsa and raffia, all beige in color, are the materials used for this effective tree. They were especially right in this case because this tree stands in front of a natural-colored bamboo curtain in a beige colored room. The ornaments blend with the background, making the tree stand out as though it were spot-lighted. This is an example of principle No. 1—that style results from discipline. Many colored ornaments frequently result in clutter and confusion, and the tree itself becomes hard to see.

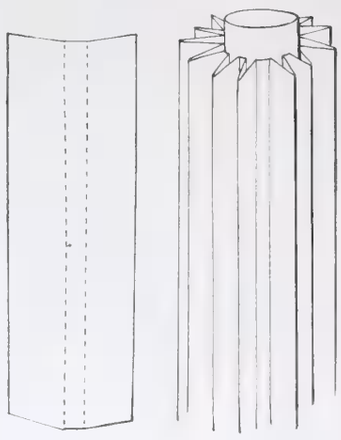
He chooses decorators who use the basic ingredients of all good design: proper scale, color harmony, appropriateness, inventiveness, richness



The first of all principles in good decorating is knowledge—knowledge of your home and of yourself. When artist Millard Sheets went about decorating his home for Christmas he had a perfect understanding of what it would take in the way of proper scale (his rooms are impressively large and high), mood (the architecture and furnishings are very striking) and color (fundamentally natural materials naturally used), if the Christmas decorations were to count at all. And being an artist, he was certainly not interested in the trite, the cliché or the commonplace. He wanted something richly inventive.

So he called on artist-decorator friends and worked with them to achieve a quality appropriate to his home. The results are shown on these four pages and aptly illustrate most of the "seven principles" described previously as the essential guides to good decorating whether for Christmas or all-year-round living: the big effect of big scale, the importance of a few important things, the basically simple color scheme of green and brown and a few accent colors, boldness in conception and execution, the freshness of familiar things such as green boughs and glass ornaments used in a fresh way, the incorporation of architectural and furnishing elements already there.

Make your ornaments big and impressive like these

Cylinder for smaller lantern (left) is core from paper towels; for larger lantern (right), core from fabric rolls obtainable in yardage shops. Fins are lightweight cardboard; surface is paper-backed foil obtainable in artists' and display supply stores. Cut cylinder desired length. Punch opposite holes with ice pick about ½" from ends for wire for hanging lantern and suspending tree balls. Cut fins to shape desired with ¾" flange (B) scored and bent at right angles. Cover A and B with foil using rubber cement on paper side. Cement cardboard surface of B to core. Use as many fins as required. Another way to make fins: (right) make a narrow flange down the center of cardboard. Score and fold to make two wings. Cut metallic paper slightly larger than pattern, paste to one side of cardboard, turning edges with paper. Place fins back to back; paste uncovered surfaces.

Very appropriate in size, color and mood are these hanging lanterns by Carmen Edgar and the table arrangement by Marguerite Ransford.

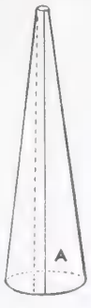
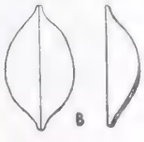
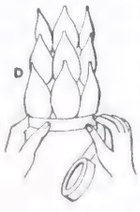
ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER



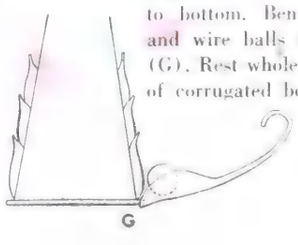


This plant arrangement is richly appropriate to its background in the home of artist Millard Sheets. The striking art objects and architectural features were deliberately incorporated in Christmas decorating plan. Arrangement executed by Marguerite Ransford.

This impressive "Balinese Christmas Tree" made by decorator-artist Carmen Edgar (see instructions opposite for details) is seven feet in height. As in all the decorations for this house, there is a remarkable harmony in size, color and feeling with the architecture, furnishings and great plants that form the surroundings of the decorations themselves. All these factors are of primary importance in all schemes. Considering them when you decorate at Christmas time is excellent practice for more permanent decorating.

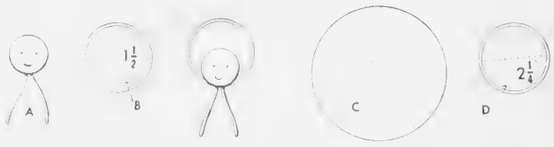


Everywhere the principles of fine decorating, applicable not only at Christmas but all year round, are beautifully demonstrated. Here the decoration by Mildred Bryant Brooks is a carved bamboo form with specially treated ferns. It illustrates the effectiveness of big, bold ornament in a similarly large-scale setting. Imagine anything smaller here against the rough brick wall and adjacent to such tall, towering plants. Apply the same sense of scale and appropriateness in your own Christmas decorating. Another idea from this home is on page 131.



Balinese Christmas Tree shown opposite is 7′ but may be as small as 3′. Cone (A) is formed of ½″ mesh hardware cloth with overlapping seam of 1″ held together with 22-gage spool wire. Fill cone with dry spagnum moss, obtainable at florists, packing firmly and forcing up into point. Attach disk of hardware cloth to bottom with wire. Wrap cone with 2″ wide strips of overlapping olive-green crepe paper (C) starting at top. Leaves (B) are made of Strathmore Student Watercolor Paper. Cut patterns of leaves in graduated sizes from light weight cardboard. Leaves at top are 2½″ long; 7″ at bottom.

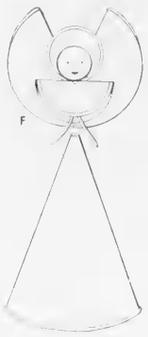
Leaf is dipped in water, folded and then modeled with thumb and index finger to give rolled outside edge. Let dry. Experiment until modeling is mastered. After all leaves are modeled and dried, mix grayed blue-green poster or tempera paint and apply to backs of leaves with stiff bristle brush and let dry. Next mix ½ pint yellow-green paint (predominantly yellow), paint top of smallest leaves. Add teaspoon mixed grayed blue-green paint to mixture for each larger row of leaves. Attach smallest leaves to top first. Hold leaf with left hand and anchor with Scotch Tape (D). Take around twice.



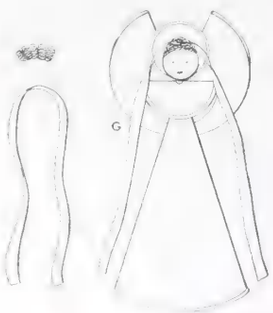
Success depends on good technique throughout. Continue using Scotch Tape until cone is large enough to use florist wire pins. Interrupt leaves at rhythmic intervals with bands of gold foil covered with alternate strings of blue and gold Christmas tree beads held by florist pins. Gold leaves (F) at bottom are reinforced by florist "Twistems" (E) down center. Cut, overlap and staple to bottom. Bend leaves out and wire balls close to cone (G). Rest whole cone on disk of corrugated board.

There's a new look to these old materials

Look for fresh ways to use commonplace objects when planning your Christmas tree trimming. Once you get the feeling of principle #6—the use of familiar things in an unfamiliar way—you might try parchment paper lampshades for tree lights, and angels made from peppermint candysticks, paper drinking cups or dime store dolls. But more than likely, you'll be encouraged to dream up your own decorations and get tremendous satisfaction from doing it. Right: To make translucent lampshades, cut white parchment paper into 3″ wide strips, 12″ long, and pleat. Staple ends to form circle. Wrap a pipe cleaner around socket, ends spread out, to hold paper away from bulb.

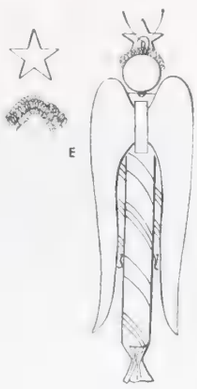


PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER



Drinking cup angels: Bend a pipe cleaner in half and push through wooden bead (A). Paste or tack a 1½″ metal-rimmed tag (B) to bead for halo. Cut two gold foil circles 4½″ in diameter, (C). Use pinking shears for beveled edge. Fold in half. Take 2¼″ metal rimmed tag (D), cut a hole in center, bend tag in half. Staple wings (E) to back of tag. To assemble (F) pull pipe cleaner through hole in collar, then through a hole cut in tip of paper cup. Bend cleaner ends out to secure. Bangs are wisps of copper scouring pad (G) pasted to head. Mantle is gold ribbon If you intend to make several of these angels, paint the faces on all beads at same time.

Tag ornaments: Stack four 4½″ metal rimmed tags, staple in center from both sides. Bend into round ornament. Repeat this performance with 1½″tags. Fasten little ornament to big one with wire.



Dime store dolls in two sizes are dressed as angels. Nylon net petticoats, gold and white skirts, two straight pieces of cloth for bodice, gold cord halo and sash, with gold metallic paper wings. Choose light weight dolls so you won't over-burden tree branches.

Ideas on these two pages by Ellen Sheridan.

Candystick angels: Use a jumbo cellophane-wrapped peppermint stick for body. Fasten smaller sticks on each side (A) for arms, wrap tape around the top several times. Push pipe cleaner through wooden bead (B), leaving ½" loop at top. Fold two gold lawyers' seals (one 3", one 4½"), to form oval bib (C). Glue together. Make a hole off-center. Assemble head and bib by pulling cleaner through hole in seals, bend cleaner to right and left, fastening ends to candystick body (D) with tape. Paste bangs of copper scouring pad, and gold star to top of head (E). Fasten white paper wings to back of angel.

Candy wreaths: Eleven small round peppermints can be held together by a long strip of cellophane paper wide enough to fold over candy. Twist it around each candy. Join ends to make circle. You can vary size by adding or removing the peppermints.

The Art of Giving is an Experiment in Living

By JOSEPH A. BARRY

Get away from cliché gift-giving this festive season and you will avoid it all year around. Do creative Christmas shopping now and you'll spend your money creatively twelve months of the year

George Bernard Shaw had one solution to the problem of presents. He gave money and let the receiver decide what he would buy for himself. This could be the most imaginative of all solutions, although on the surface it seems the least imaginative.

Let us explain.

Shaw, in another connection, was once asked how he wrote a play. He replied, in words to this effect, "I set a few characters in motion and then they proceed to take over and write their own play."

Isn't this the same as Shaw's giving people money with which to buy their own presents, except that in a play he spends it for them as if they were spending it for themselves?

This Christmas play the part of the playwright. Set the few people who really mean something to you in motion, in your mind. Follow them, in your mind's eye, as they walk down the streets and through the many stores. In other words, live their lives and their thoughts and their unspoken wishes as actively and imaginatively as you can.

We might call it creative Christmas shopping. Actually, it is an experiment in living. For within each of us a hundred possible lives lie slumbering and smoldering. We have chosen only one of them or perhaps have had one forced upon us by external fate, but all the others are there longing for fulfillment. Some we perceive distinctly, others obscurely but no less passionately.

Our friends may each represent our other possible lives, and being with them offers us a chance to participate vicariously in other things, in other thoughts. They enlarge our experience: they multiply the levels on which we live. If nothing else, buying them presents gives us an opportunity to enter their bodies and see the world through their eyes. It is a fairy-tale wish to change your form at will, to move mysteriously and invisibly, to be you and to be not you. It is the gift of friendship, for friends are one mind in several bodies.

Shakespeare, a playwright second only to Shaw, in Shaw's opinion, lived so many public lives we know little of his single personal life. He was Iago and Desdemona, Hamlet and the King, Falstaff and Prince Hal. No wonder Shakespeare the man was so mild and seemingly content. Like Thurber's Walter Mitty, we too have our unspoken commitment and our secret many-sided life. On Christmas we might exercise it, set all our lives in motion, let them loose one by one. The art of giving requires awareness of the beautiful and the imagination to make the most out of it, as was achieved here with this piece of natural sculpture.

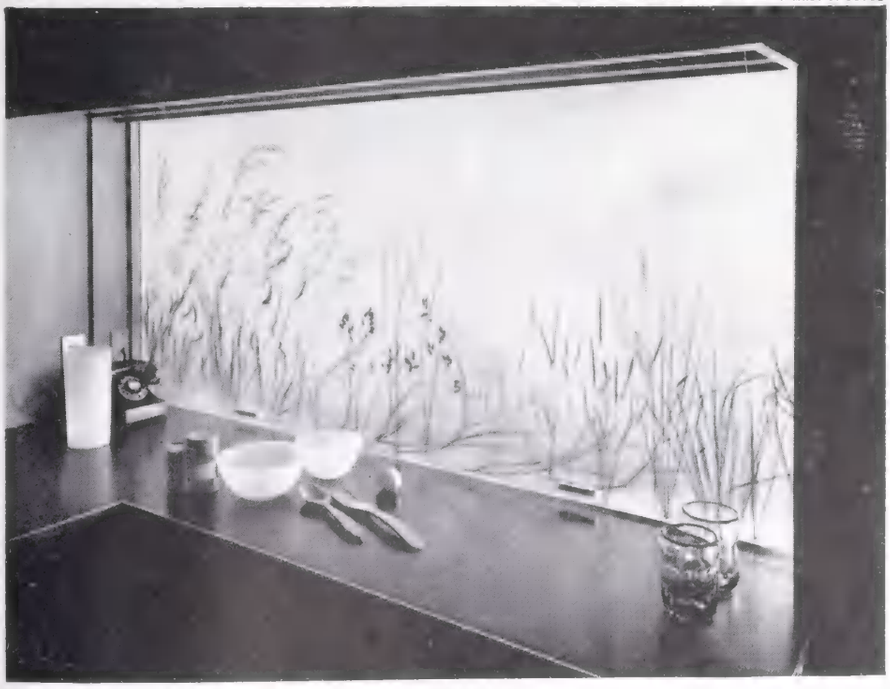
The results are beyond merely getting away from the obvious categories of gifts: perfumes for women and ties for men; scarves for older women and slippers for older men; gifts for the man who has everything and gifts for the woman who wears mink to the grocery store; gifts for the outdoor girl and gifts for the indoor man. You know all these categories only too well.

If you get away from such categorical, cliché thinking this festive season, you may get away from it all year round. If you do creative Christmas shopping now, you'll be spending your money creatively twelve months of the year. If you buy the gifts your friends will like best, you will buy yourself the home you'll like most of all and all the time.

Let's put the principle into practice:

We have a friend to whom the modern movement in furnishing is beginning to pall. More and more she is turning for pleasure to the early 1900's, to the architecture of the Greene and Greene brothers and its exquisite cabinetry, to the work created during the art nouveau period when the curve was the line of beauty. To give her a present is to understand her new interest—that must come first. Understanding it eventually means sharing it—and that's the beauty of the whole thing; we extend our own experience to include hers. The present we've picked for her is a Louis Tiffany lamp: stained floral glass with a bronze base.



We have another friend who has lived in Paris for about 50 years. She shared the adventure of the early Cubist painting and lives in an apartment with some of the finest examples of it. She also participated in the writing that helped create the Twentieth Century. And all this time her interest has been in the quality of the daily life: cooking, needle-work and, yes, dusting. ("You don't really know a painting," she says, "until you dust it every day.") For some time we have been amiably debating the standard of cooking today versus the standard of yesterday. We have been arguing the virtues of contemporary techniques over the labor- and time-consuming hand-techniques of the past. So we are buying her two things: a dust cloth impregnated with silicone and an electric blender, that wonderful gadget that makes molehills out of mountains of work. And we are adapting it to French current.

Another gourmet friend, who writes so knowledgeably about cooking and serving food, is going to get a marble slab on which to serve smoked salmon. A gardening friend is going to get a handsome stone we picked up after a flower show closed, with him in mind. We picked it up months ago and saved it for this occasion. A man we know who is slowly and painfully finishing a house for himself will be surprised by a medieval Persian tile, a bas relief, which we hope he'll (Please turn to page 162)

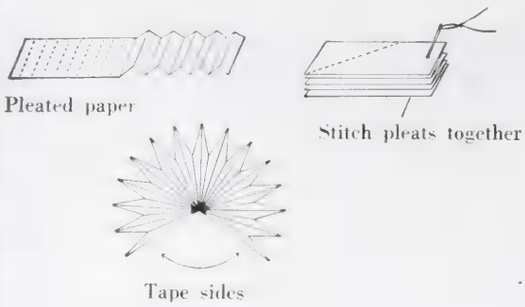
Make Christmas an adventure in free taste



This is the season for having fun and for being yourself. And so, if you have ever been timid about expressing your own free choice of colors, materials, and patterns, here is your golden chance to throw inhibitions to the four winds and let yourself go. Make your choice of Christmas trimming your first bold step, for the makings of Christmas can be anything your heart desires. You may find them in the playroom, in the pantry, among your ribbons or costume jewelry, wherever you see an object that pleases your eye and appeals to your taste. Anything is eligible for use as long as it's gay and lovely. And it's relaxing to remember that mistakes, if any, can't cost much, because the materials you work with are rarely expensive. Best of all, from this exercise in lighthearted daring you'll be building confidence in your own judgment which will stand you in good stead when you embark on more serious decorating ventures.

GILT PAPER AND NET can turn into gossamer birds and glimmering stars. Just cut a bird profile from a fold of foil paper, slit paper where the wings should be, then insert a pleating of crisp net, its ends cut diagonally (see sketch). Staple a shorter pleating of net to the tail. Spread-out star is made of accordion-pleated gilt paper, clipped diagonally at one end and stitched with thread at the other. Pull out folds and tape sides together.

SHINY BALLS AND BOWS—quite a simple concept for a tree trim, but when you execute the idea in one color and tie the bows like plump hair-ribbons you get an out-of-the-ordinary effect. Here's one more proof that the gayest, most impressive glitter is always the result of restraint. A multi-color variety of piddling ornaments only confuses the eye. Tree from San Francisco Women's Garden Club Christmas Bazaar.

FRESH FRUIT, specifically limes, Tokay grapes and blushing Rome Beauty apples, suggested this tree trim to landscape architect Joseph Copp. He concentrated the fruit along the tree trunk like a Della Robbia garland, using stiff florist's wire to hold it in place. For brightness he added fruit-colored glitter balls. Home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben McBurney.

TRINKETS IN CHINA on this tree in a room by Taylor-Mihailoff remind you that Christmas trimmings may be no farther away than your demi-tasse cups and figurines. YOUR OWN STAINED GLASS may be jewel-colored cellophane cut-outs, applied with glue or rubber cement to a clear glass door or window. You can give your imagination free rein with subjects and shapes that please you, and it's an inexpensive experiment in self-expression because the materials are cheap enough to let you make mistakes and start over again. I am now about to give away my choicest recipe for enjoying a relaxed and happy Christmas dinner. It's simply this: Prepare your Christmas dinner at Thanksgiving time.

I can just hear your reaction—"That gal is mad, but real mad!" But if you do a double take on this and mull the idea around for a while, you'll begin to see that it makes a lot of good sense.

First of all, in November you're psychologically geared to the idea of the big family feast. You're going to have to do a major planning, buying and cooking job for Thanksgiving anyway, so why not use this effort to take care of the future festival at the same time? Ten years ago you couldn't have done it, because the home freezer and the wonderful new canned foods are the real Santa Clauses that make this possible, but thank heaven you can do it now, as I've proved for myself. And you've no idea how blithely and gaily you can face 16 or 20 for the big feast when all the culinary spadework is done. You can whirl through the holiday fun like a dervish without being worn out and harassed by food problems. This system also lets you treat Thanksgiving as a sort of dress rehearsal for the big feast day. What doesn't pan out on your first dinner you can correct or discard on the second. THE MOST-WANTED TABLE

"Wanted" because few if any reading tables have been manufactured for 50 years, and never have so many read so much

These days, when so many of us read so much, a well-designed reading table has been strangely lacking. Now, at last, here it is. With the center support lifted up, it holds a book or a magazine at the right height and distance, and is designed to roll easily on casters over the arms of an average-size chair or chaise longue. With the center lid down, flush with the table top, it is an ideal game or buffet table. Made of mahogany by the Imperial Furniture Company, it sells for $99.75, comes in a mahogany or three other finishes, and has been chosen as a Classic by HOUSE BEAUTIFUL Magazine.

Plan your mortgage as you plan your home

The new housing bill has a number of advantageous features for home buyers in the $12,000 to $25,000 bracket. Also, it includes favorable terms for buying and modernizing existing houses. These facts may affect your planning for 1955

In 1955, as always, most new homeowners will have to borrow money to finance the houses they buy. The only differences are that: (1) mortgage money will be much easier to get than in this year or last, and (2) the Housing Act passed by the Congress last summer has some new features that you will want to take into account when you plan your financing, whether you are buying or building a new house or buying and modernizing an old one.

Among the features of the new law, the most important is the lowering of down-payment requirements on mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration. This applies both to houses that were approved by FHA before the start of construction and to those that weren't, including houses that have been around for some time. And it particularly benefits houses in the $12,000 to $25,000 range.

For houses built under FHA inspection, the mortgage amount may be as high as 95% of FHA's appraisal of the first $9,000 of value and 75% of the value above that amount. The maximum permissible insured mortgage is $20,000. These allowances mean that it will be possible to borrow $20,000 (or 80% of value) on a house valued at $25,000, or $16,800 (84%) on a house valued at $20,000 or $15,300 (85%) on an $18,000 house and so on down the range. For houses valued at $12,000 or more, the new terms are from $800 to $4,000 better than have heretofore been available under FHA financing (see table).

FHA loans on even higher-priced, newly built houses will now prove attractive on loan-to-value comparisons. Since the most common maximum loan-to-value ratio for conventional loans is 66⅔%, it will usually be only for houses worth $30,000 or more that the conventional loan may be in a larger amount than the insured loan. (There are, of course, variations to this. Some savings and loan associations, and other types of lending institutions in some of the states, may make conventional loans above the 66⅔% ratio. Furthermore, since appraisal is not an exact science, one institution's 66⅔% loan may, for example, be as much as another's 75% loan.)

Up to the present time, the largest insured mortgage loan that you could make on an existing house was 80% of value up to a maximum loan amount of $16,000. Now if you are planning to buy an existing house, you will find that you may borrow up to 90% of the first $9,000 of value as appraised by FHA and 75% of the value in addition to that amount, up to a maximum loan of $20,000.

Although these terms are not quite as generous as those on newly built houses, they are more liberal than anything available before. For example, if you are buying an older house that FHA values at $15,000, you may borrow as much as $12,600. Formerly, the best you could have done would have been $12,000. The value of any alterations, repairs or improvements that you may be making can be included in the calculation.

These same terms and conditions will, of course, make it easier for you to sell the house you already own and consequently may help you to realize your dream of a better one. Moreover, if you simply wish to better the house you already own, you may get an insured mortgage that will cover the cost of improvement as well as the amount of any existing debt, provided FHA's top limits are not exceeded.

FHA mortgages on newly built houses may hereafter be amortized over as long a period as 30 years, and on older houses, over a period of three-fourths the estimated future useful life of the property, provided that this calculation does not run the period to more than 30 years. For most FHA mortgages the former maximum amortization period was 25 years. The extension makes it possible somewhat to reduce the monthly payment on a given amount of loan.

In any mortgage that you give on a new or older property, you should have the lender include a clause permitting you, at any future time, to obtain additional funds under the same mortgage instrument for additions and major repairs or alterations. This is called "open-ending" the mortgage, and its advantage is that you are enabled by it to finance future improvements at the same interest rate and maturity as the original mortgage, thus avoiding the expense of either refinancing the whole mortgage so as to cover the increase or of paying the high interest rates charged for second mortgages or for consumer-type credit.

Many institutions have been making conventional loans that include the "open-end" feature, but heretofore it was not possible to do so at all with FHA-insured loans and was allowed only to a limited extent with loans guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

Now the new law specifically authorizes FHA to insure "open-end" mortgages on both new and existing houses. It is understood also that FHA will allow a borrower under an out- (Please turn to page 183)

The Gift of SELF-MADE Music

CAROL BLANCHARD

Here are 12 suggestions for musical Christmas gifts. Give one to your music-loving friend and one to yourself

No joy quite compares with the joy of playing a musical instrument yourself. You may believe this even as you recognize that you'll never be more than a Sunday Sarasate with little skill and a lot of love. Play a little, but play yourself. The half-a-loaf of playing badly is more nourishing than a diet consisting exclusively of listening. There lies pleasure in the violin even if you are unable to "fiddle all the bugs off a sweet potato vine," as Stephen Vincent Benet put it. There lies pleasure in the piano or in an electric organ. Indeed, a home without a piano lacks sound, beautiful as it may be. It is like a seascape from which the song of the waves has been deleted.

However, it is possible to make music with instruments less inclusive than the piano, less expressive than the violin, simple instruments which are easy to learn and which can repay whatever little skill they do require with the kind of pleasure that you'd get from singing a tune. These instruments are often a relative or ancestor of a fully developed virtuoso instrument. For example, the recorder is a cousin of the flute. To call them toy instruments is an unfair derogation. The good ones aren't toys. They are instruments for making music, though of limited expressiveness. For a family just becoming interested in music, and particularly for a family in which there are young children, these instruments make charming Christmas gifts. Let me point out a few of them.

The Recorder is undoubtedly the most useful and the most popular of them all. The tone of a good recorder is truly sweet and musical, suggesting, as I have said, that of the flute. It is possible for a family to play four-part harmony on four recorders, since they come in bass, tenor, alto, and soprano size. Quite a few recorder societies have been formed: People get together of an evening to play music which is plaintive and gentle and which includes Bach and Scarlatti as well as modern compositions. The recorder can be learned in a few hours or at most a few days. A good recorder can be bought for around $15.

Mambo Drums. A mambo mania is sweeping our country. The Cuban rhythm, which is impudent and unbridled, has become the younger generation's favorite dance. Mambo drums are small drums of different pitch, and with a set of two or three, played perhaps as an accompaniment to a Perez Prado record, you can let yourself go, provided the neighbors don't object.

Bandino. This is a sophisticated ukulele larger in size and deeper in tone. It has become particularly (Please turn to page 189)

How To Judge A Reproduction

BETTMANN ARCHIVE

When you buy a "print" or a reproduction as a Christmas present, or for your own imaginary museum, be sure it meets the tests graphically described here

By ROY McMULLEN

Three summers ago, in a rolling barrage of rain which the Spanish travel agent hinted my atomic bomb had provoked, I drove down from Madrid to Toledo, parked somewhere in the Sixteenth Century, sloshed through a Gothic alley to the church of Santo Tomé and had my retinas warmed and my throat caught by El Greco's "Burial of Count Orgaz."

That travel agent should have revised his chatter. The painter himself could not have arranged a more theatrical sequence than the billowing drapery of rain, the humming, twilit church, the sudden swirl of Baroque brightness. It was a great day, one of those when all the irritating work of going on a pilgrimage pays off.

It was also one of those when a healthy tourist becomes a compulsive buyer of souvenirs, and I stopped on my way back to the car and picked up the first reproduction of the painting I found. And last week I looked at it. The colors are garish, the contrasts as brutal as a checkerboard. The piercing mysticism in the noblemen's faces is blunted into dreaminess. In short, the thing is a catch-penny catastrophe.

What can we do about this sort of esthetic ambush? It's no use vowing we won't buy color reproductions; we are buying them. Some are as faithful as our high-fidelity recorded music; we can now sit at home and realize our old dream of loitering through the Louvre with our shoes off.

But we can also lead our tastes into the temptation of the meretricious. How, in the midst of this wonderful and dangerous techno-cultural boom, should we set about being the curators of our imaginary museums?

I should say our first duty is to put up room dividers (mental ones, of course) to separate our "museums" proper from our memory departments and reference libraries. Let us worry where there is something worth worrying about.

Is that obscure? Well, the defects in my El Greco, for example, cannot really fuddle my taste so long as I use the print only to help me recall my experience that day in Toledo. It is just a talisman in my memory department, an old program brought home from a visual concert. And I think we can risk having indifferent copies of pictures we know well, for the kick in this kind of collection is not intrinsic; it is hitched to the intensity of our experience of the originals.

We may also be indulgent about our illustrated reference works and critical studies. A good book about painting is a memory collection assembled for us by some one else, and here again the reproductions are not required to move us with their own power; they are—or should be—charged with the intensity of the critic's experience of the originals.

But the true 1955-model imaginary museum functions in a realm quite distinct from that of relics and books. For the reproductions in this part of the home collection should do something we do not ask of the others: They should generate their own kick. They should produce an effect which approximates that of original paintings we may never have seen.

There are hundreds of color prints carrying out that delicate assignment today, and they are encouraging evidence that our new distributive culture need not mean a lowering of the standards set by our older elite cultures. But which ones are they? How can we even begin to judge the quality of a copy when we have never seen the original?

I recall putting that last question to Guy Spitzer, who is one of the most respected craftsmen in the business in Europe. He waved at a powerful Braque on the wall of his shop and said, "Why, you judge a reproduction the way you do a suspected forgery. You squint, and then you back off and look again, and then you have a feeling." Not much of a formula. Yet it is true that if we wish to extend our knowledge of painting by buying prints, we had better have some knowledge to extend. We can never, after all, be sure that a particular reproduction is an exact copy of an unknown Braque original, but we may develop enough sensitivity to feel that it is a good Braque.

There are, however, a few cautions which we ought to keep in mind while we are waiting for an (Please turn to page 179)

This detail from Rembrandt's "Portrait of the Artist" is exactly the same size as in the original. Thus it gives true dimensions and some sense of texture lacking in the reproduction at left. However it has no color and little value in the painter's sense.

Secrets of French

Little Known French Dishes Suitable for American and British Kitchens

These dishes should add variety to American menus. In France they are no longer novelties nor creations, nor have they the distinction of being distinctive, which, as defined by a cousin of Gertrude Stein, is something that is done six weeks before all the world is doing it. On the contrary, they are most of them a slow evolution in a new direction, which is the way great art is created—that is, everything about is ready for it, and one person having the vision does it, discarding what he finds unnecessary in the past. Even a way of cooking an egg can be arrived at in this way. Then that way becomes a classical way. It is a pleasure for us, perhaps for the egg.

It is, of course, understood that there are always those who rush in and irreverently add a dash or a pinch from a bottle, a tin or a package and feel that some needed flavour has been found. This, a matter too literally of taste, is not arguable. It is a pleasure to retire before such a fact.

For the preparation of these dishes, certain standard sauces and what the French call composed butters are necessary. Those used in these recipes follow these standards.

Egg Plant à la Provençale: Wipe but do not peel 6 aubergines or eggplants, cut in slices of 1½ inches, salt and pepper; put them in a saucepan over medium heat in which 6 tablespoons olive oil are bubbling. Brown lightly on all sides, remove from flame, drain the aubergines. In the oil in which they have been cooked, put 3 blanched and skinned tomatoes that have been coarsely chopped. Add salt and pepper, 1 clove of crushed garlic and 2 diced anchovies. Cook over low heat until tomatoes are cooked. Remove from flame and add 1 tablespoon chopped basil. Place 1 teaspoon of this sauce on each slice of eggplant. On the sauce place a thin slice of lemon, on the lemon place a rolled anchovy, and in the anchovy, stand 1 black olive upright.

Cauliflower with Mustard Cream Sauce: Boil the flowerets of cauliflower in salted water for 10 minutes. Drain, cool and chill. Before serving, pour on this sauce:

In a sauce pan melt 1 tablespoon butter. Add 1 tablespoon flour and 1 tablespoon mustard. Mix thoroughly, add ⅔ cup boiling water. Blend with a whisk. Add 2 yolks of eggs mixed with 1 tablespoon whipped cream. Beat before pouring over flowerets and serve at once.

Mimosa Soup: Boil in salted water 1 cup string beans. When tender, depending upon size and freshness, remove from heat, drain and cut into cubes. Mash through a very coarse sieve the yolks of four hard-boiled eggs. Just before serving, bring to a boil 1 quart bouillon. Add diced string beans and the yolks of eggs. Bring to a boil again, remove at once and serve.

Fillets of Sole Perinette: Salt and pepper 4 large fillets of sole. Prepare 2 cups mashed potatoes thoroughly mixed with 2 tablespoons cream, 1 egg, salt and pepper. Mash through fine sieve 2 yolks of hard-boiled eggs. Chop very

Bouquets of mint or mint plants—as many kinds as your nursery has—set in silvery Kensington Ware mugs that look frosty always; a bottle of magical Mintit to use along with or instead of fresh sprigs. And the world's handsomest silver-plated ice crusher, the Bucketeer (Rival Manufacturing Co.)

Nothing startling about them, these are gifts you'd expect to send to those who enjoy the good things of life—fine liquors, delicate morsels, cookbooks, rare spices, the many aids to gourmet cooking and epicurean eating.

But something lifts them far out of the ordinary—something of what you are and a nice perception of what they want.

A traveling-case bar for a traveling man or a peripatetic pair is a good idea. Better if you know that most trips are made by car, and best if you're sure of their favorite brands and drinks so that bitters go along for a bourbon old-fashioned. All in a box with a mighty star wheel to remain a symbol of Christmas for years to come.

Thought-built Gifts for the Modern

By POPPY CANNON

For your hostess with the mostest

Bedeck and bedizen a party-size Presto Pressure Cooker. Send a set of exquisite pots de crème with matching tray and compotier—all white as Christmas. From Soupçon. Add a bottled caramel syrup, Zeste Morestin, and a recipe for perfect crèmes caramels made in 3 minutes.

This if for nuts—mad, merry, practical

If they like to grind their own coffee, churn a bit of the best butter, blend batters, frost a fine daiquiri, send them the new two-speed Osterizer. It will even chop those nuts you've hidden beneath nut wafers in a trompe l'oeil dish that looks for all the world like piled-up plates topped with ceramic nuts. Dish from France via Macy's New York.

She's the loveliest, bakingest lady

To spare her pretty arms—the beatingest (triple-headed) mixer yet devised (General Electric's). Add a treasure of classic recipes—Charlotte Turgeon's latest—"Tante Marie's French Pastry." And to nibble as she reads, brioche in a basket which is also a steamer and/or cake rack.

Epicure

We're thinking about a man of the world

Wherever he goes he'll have his favorite Teachers' Scotch, his Remy Martin, his Kentucky Tavern; shaker, stirrer, strainer, and opener, all in a sleek traveling-case bar (Wales Luggage Corporation). And in each glass a thoughtful extra—Angostura bitters, a miniature bottle of vermouth, cherries, olives, and some cocktail picks. Make a corsage of cocktail picks and metallic paper leaves to tie on the handle.

GIVING TO

Gardeners aren't such a special breed that they won't appreciate

One wonderful plant, preferably both as rare and as well grown as this Kalanchoe beharensis, is a thoughtful gift, especially if it comes in a handsome pot. But don't expect cheers for indiscriminate giving. True gardeners hate to throw away any living plant, but they won't like finding a home for something they really don't want.

Handsome containers (left) are almost nonexistent, it often seems to exasperated seekers of them, so when you do find one for Christmas-giving to the indoor gardener you are sure your gift will be cherished. This planter, in a most sensible size for today's big, important indoor plants, is one of several by the McGuire Company.

Shade for the terrace is most welcome when it comes from a beautiful tree—and winter is the best time to move in a big tree. The cost? $200 and up from reliable nurseries that supply a written guarantee that your gift will live. In regions where big trees are not available, how about giving a modern arbor (right)? This one was designed by landscape architect Thomas Church.

GARDENERS

a gift which they wouldn't buy for themselves. Here's what they dote on

By DR. JOSEPH E. HOWLAND
House Beautiful's Garden Editor

My most successful Christmas giving to fellow gardeners has come from following two rules. First, whether plant, gadget or what have you, it must have made gardening more exciting for me in my own garden. Then I am sharing a discovery—and this makes the second simple rule necessary: The gift must complement the receiver's interests in gardening. I happen to like roses very much, but there is no point in "sharing" a rose discovery with one of my good friends who happens to be a dahlia enthusiast who can't understand why I bother with roses. If there is a third rule, it involves gifts that concern garden design, say a pool, a terrace, or fencing. Hire the best landscape architect you can get to design the gift.

(Please turn the page)

Companion plants may start your friend on a whole new discovery in gardening. He may never have tried together the two kinds you have found so fine as complements, and receiving such a pair would indeed be a compliment from one gardener to another, especially when it has also been chosen to fit the background as well as this pyracantha and yew fit here.

N DALSIMER LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT; GARDEN OF MR & MRS E FEIT

A stylish new terrace might be a family gift. It makes the garden much more a part of daily living for the non-gardening member—and nothing is more flattering to a garden lover than to have his whole family see and use his handiwork. Call upon the best landscape architect you know to design it; a landscape nurseryman to install it.

• Electric chain saw would be exciting gift for anyone with tree prunings to saw into firewood.

• Pruning shears seem so plebeian that gardeners often fail to buy the really good ones ($5 to $15) that would make pruning far easier and less damaging.

• 2-wheel garden cart ($10 to $25) replaces the old-fashioned wheelbarrow, brings new ease to gardening.

• Hoe collection (Union "Green Thumb" offers 29 kinds) would make any real gardener beam. Costs about $35.

• Garden lights, new this year, would offer the recipient new enjoyment from gardening. Investigate especially the "Lightolier" line ($10 to $17). Color filters (about $3) would also delight the gardener.

• Lawn sprinklers in the $5 class he may have, but how about the wonderful big sprinklers ($25-$40)?

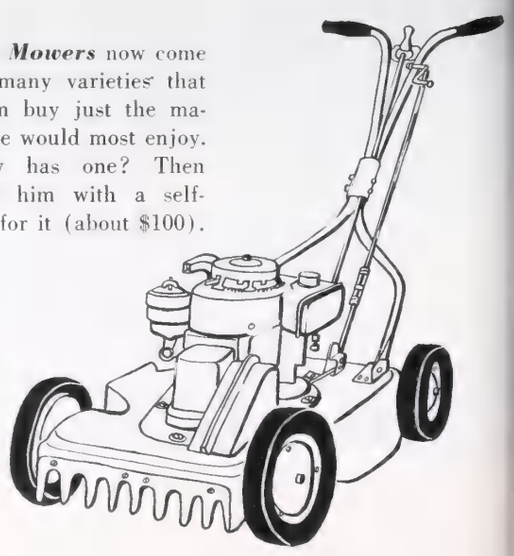
• Favorite garden chemicals you have found exceptionally effective may not be known to your gardener friend.

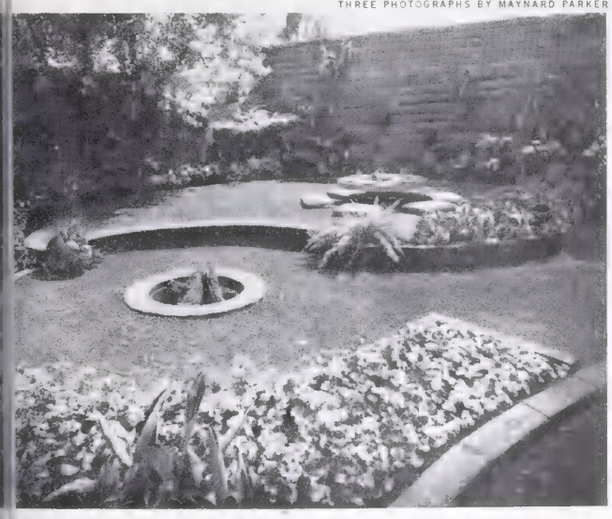
Art in the garden offers a wonderful chance to compliment a gardener. Choose from sculpture, as modern as this concrete and iron composition by Florence Swift or a more traditional one. The number of superb pieces is limited, but good ones do exist. Settle for no less.



A snowplow is the gift for the man who won't slow down (no one over 40 can shovel snow safely, health statistics show). Choose either a gasoline-powered one as here, or an electric (uses 110-volt house current).

Flower and plant containers are always welcome gifts; they say so well the receiver's plants are worthy of the finest display. And anyone who grows plants indoors knows how hard it is to find truly good containers. We found these at Jensen's, Lord & Taylor, and Jasmine Shoppes in New York.

Power Mowers now come in so many varieties that you can buy just the machine he would most enjoy. Already has one? Then pamper him with a self-starter for it (about $100).



Espalier fruit trees are a handsome addition to the garden. On a sunny wall they soak up unwanted summer heat, burst into a shower of blooms each spring, bear the biggest, juiciest fruits anyone can grow. Strength goes into the fruit instead of the usual big framework of hefty branches. Three-arm plants cost $10 to $15; 8-arm masterpieces like this might be $50 to $75.

Garden pool (below) often seems an extravagance to a new gardener who needs more plants. He'd like a pool, but—. You can order one built to complement his garden as your gift. Cost? The sky is the limit. This one, complete with brick wall and circulating pump, is about $100; $35 will buy a shallow steel bowl 3′ across, 6″ deep at center, to be set anywhere.

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

A re-do for the back yard benefits the whole family. Look what happened to this tiny yard (20′x20′). Total cost might be $400. You could order such a transformation, or you might give the first instalment, namely, the designer's fee (note how well this garden illustrates that design, not plants, is the key to really good gardening.

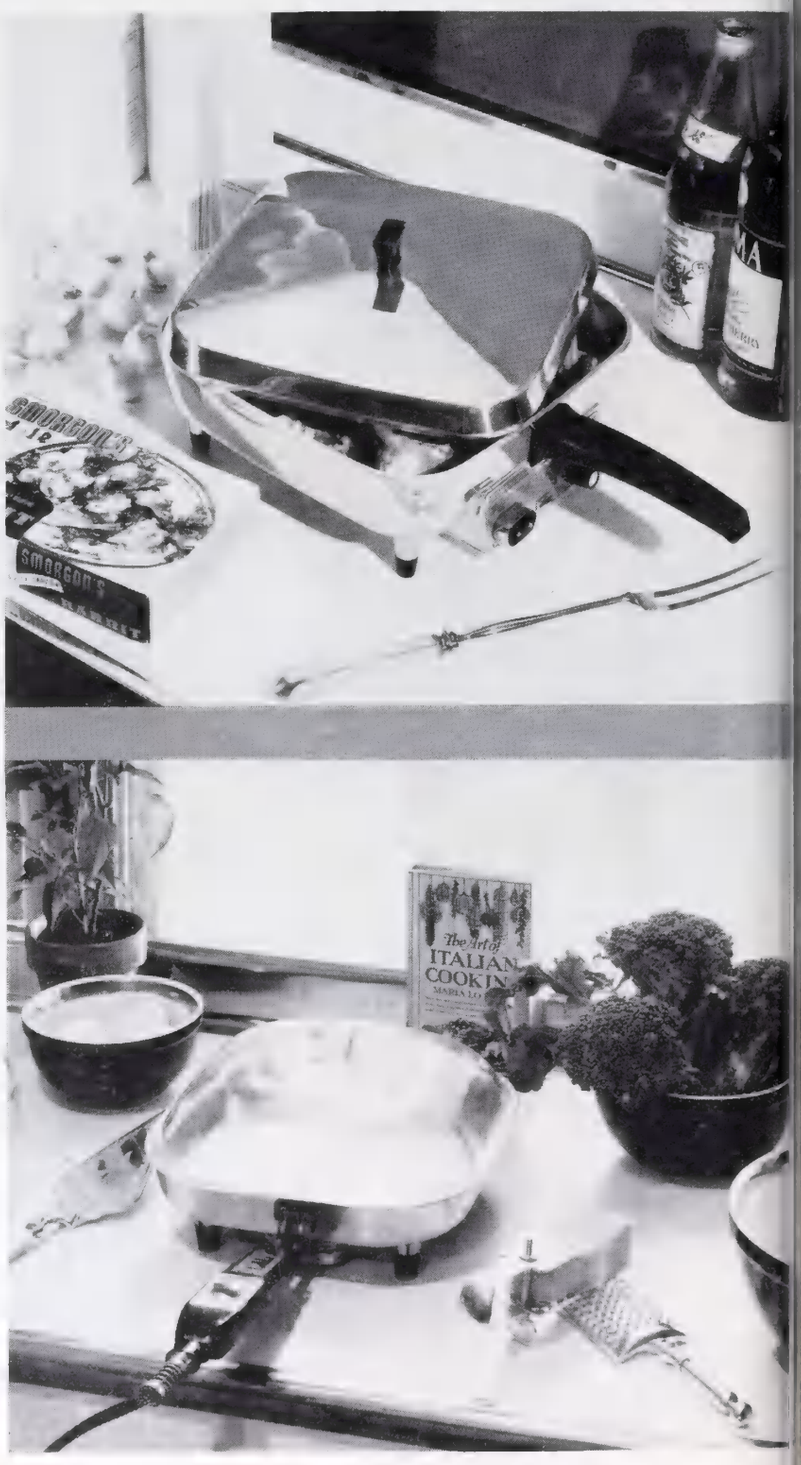
The Gift you could never give before

Newest of all the new electric tools for the modern epicure, the automatic heat-controlled electric skillet gives a new dimension to cooking, a new freedom, sureness and ease



By POPPY CANNON and JULIE POLSHEK

This Christmas many a gentle soul will be sponsoring a revolution in the kitchen. Such a benign revolution, brought about by the new automatic, controlled-heat electric skillets! It's a big leap out of the old-fashioned frying pan to this new way of cooking. Suddenly for the first time top-of-the-stove cooking can be as accurate and as foolproof as in the most modern oven.

Know-how that once took years to acquire is built into these new skillets. That sixth sense that the great chefs learned so painfully can now be approximated by the most unlearned bride.

You don't have to be able to judge heat by the look and smell of the metal. You needn't learn how to time the sputter of drops of water on a griddle. The old, old trick of shaking the pan becomes unnecessary, for that was essentially a method of controlling temperature and preventing sticking.

Now a thermostat controls the heat. Often silicone treatments keep food from sticking, cut down scouring. The admonition to "stir constantly" may become obsolete, for stirring is another way to keep temperatures even. The double-boiler, the asbestos pad, are less necessary when, with a flick of a finger, you can maintain all temperatures.

For famous gibelotte—French rabbit stew use Smorgon's ready-skinned, disjointed, quick-frozen rabbit. Thaw, sprinkle with salt, pepper, flour. Brown in 2 tablespoons olive oil at 375° F. Add ⅓ cup Roma sherry; simmer 30 minutes. Remove. Brown in 2 tablespoons butter 12 tiny white onions; add 1 can thin-sliced mushrooms with broth. Replace rabbit; simmer 30 minutes more. Serve over garlic toast right from the Dominion Fry Skillet (Dominion Electric Corp., Mansfield, Ohio).

No longer fussy—the Frittata. The Sunbeam (Sunbeam Corp., Chicago, Ill.) makes it sure as sure. Just mix well 4 eggs with salt, pepper, 1 clove garlic crushed, 3 tablespoons freshly grated Parmesan, 1 small bunch broccoli lightly cooked, cut into inch pieces. Heat 4 tablespoons olive oil to 320° F., add egg mixture; cook 5 minutes; turn. Brown 2 or 3 minutes. Cut into four or six wedges. (Silver grater from Rome.)

Every king-size pancake perfect with the Nesco Fryryte (Nesco, Inc., Milwaukee, Wis.). Blend 5 whole eggs with 1 cup milk, 1 package Flako Popover mix. Heat Fryryte to 360° F., melt 2 tablespoons butter, add ¼ cup batter, tilt pan so it's completely covered; cook till dry-looking, turn with wide spatula, cook other side. Serve with apple sauce, apple butter, jam or lingonberry preserves. Sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Recipe makes 10 pancakes.

Sauté soft-shell crabs amandine are no longer seasonal; they come clean, quick-frozen. Cooking's so swift with Swifty (Eastern Metal Products Co., Tuckahoe, N.Y.). Roll crabs in flour, melt ¼ cup butter and cook at 375° F. till lightly browned. Turn once. Sprinkle over them 2 tablespoons lemon juice, a few grains of cayenne, a few grains of pepper. Just before serving garnish with canned shredded almonds and fresh or crisp-fried parsley.

UNLESS OTHERWISE NOTED, ACCESSORIES COURTESY OF MACY'S

Short-order hors d'oeuvres—a stylish adjunct to dinner or cocktails. Buy a package of Eat-All's quick-frozen Salmonettes, their miniature crabcakes, or Beardsley's mite-size codfish balls. In your handsome Markel Maid Fry Pan (Markel Electric Products, Buffalo, N. Y.) pour vegetable oil 1 inch deep. Heat to 400° F., drop in frozen tidbits, cook 3 or 4 minutes till crisp and brown on both sides. A quick, easy living-room version of deep-fat frying! (Cocktail picks from Paris.)

COOKING WITH SOYA SAUCE

Your cooking repertoire is not complete until you know the versatile ways of this Oriental seasoning

What is this strange brown magic—salty Oriental sorcery? This ancient sorcery that has found its way more and more frequently to our tables and now happily into our kitchens?

There was a time way back in the middle ages (1920 or 1925) when soya sauce was quite unfamiliar to the American housewife—never encountered outside a Chinese restaurant. Then came the Beachcomber, my own Trader Vic's, and other exotic restaurants owned and operated by Americans. Came World War II and our men returning from the Far East with new knowledge and new interests in the fare of far-off lands.

Soya sauce became more familiar as a table condiment. But its varied uses in everyday cooking are still not appreciated.

There is no real mystery about soya sauce other than the mystery which surrounds all things wonderful! Made of hydralized soya beans and roasted wheat, it was originally an invention of the Chinese cleverly calculated to add meat flavor to their preponderantly vegetable dishes. Now we find large manufacturers of corn starch and wheat products making soya sauce, not because it is a by-product, but because the processes go hand in hand. Many flavor accentuators like Zest, Accent and other monosodium glutamates are made from vegetable proteins derived often from soya beans, so that actually soya sauce is the great-granddaddy of them all, with tremendous powers to point up and enhance flavors. You can use a little soya sauce in many, many kinds of cooking wherever the color will permit—in gravies and sauces, for instance. Try it when you are preparing green vegetables. Use a little soya sauce instead of salt. Wonderful with green beans.

From Honolulu

In Hawaii, where the bulk of the population and all of the kitchen help are Oriental, meals are steeped in Oriental ways, which means a lot of soya sauce not only in Oriental dishes adapted to Western tastes, but also in many American stand-bys which have been given a new twist and flavor.

During my last visit to Honolulu we were the guests of (Please turn to page 131)

16mm. I have in mind the case of a married couple who have spent a great deal of time outside the country and have taken many movies. They hope one day to create an adventure film of their world travels and use it as the basis for lectures in clubs and churches. This is a goal they may never achieve, but it is an incentive to their film-making activities—and using 16mm film makes it a possibility. Sixteen millimeter film can also be shown on television and in classrooms.

The advanced amateur is likely to prefer the finer qualities of the 16mm film. Often he has had some years' experience with an 8mm camera. For him movies are not merely an incidental gadget, they are an avocation. The pleasure comes not just from seeing and showing the finished pictures—but from the actual planning, making, and editing as well. Of course, these same pleasures can be pursued with an 8mm camera. Yet the fact seems to be that most out-and-out lovers of film use 16mm equipment, while those who merely flirt with movie-making are content with 8mm. The cost of a standard 16mm camera runs from about $130 (for a simplified magazine load) to $1,000 for the professional models.

Projectors: The fact that much more 8mm film than 16mm is used by amateurs need not sway us completely. It may also be true that most people wear shoes that don't fit, but that is no reason for you to do the same—or me either! The 8mm movie camera is a good investment, but it requires a matching projector which simply does not offer the versatility of the 16mm projector. It is possible to get a magnetic sound-on-film projector for 8mm film (costing about $300), but even this fairly well limits you to showing your own movies. The great variety of films that can be rented or borrowed to show at home on your 16mm sound projector is to me the determining factor in selecting the 16mm equipment.

Whatever gauge you decide on, you must have a projector that matches your camera—and don't postpone getting it, even for a few months. You may plan to do your screening at the home of a friend, neighbor, or relative, but you'll surely find such arrangements a nuisance to yourself and the others involved. Like any other discomfort, avoid it best before it starts. The 8mm silent projector costs about $150 (with one low-priced model costing about $65). A better than adequate 16mm sound projector for home use costs in the neighborhood of $400. Silent films can ordinarily be shown on a sound projector, but not vice versa.

Sound-on-film: One of the frustrating problems for the serious amateur is how to get sound (music, commentary, and dialogue) onto the movies he has made. The newly devised magnetic sound projectors allow you to record and re-record your own sound track, or to use the ordinary (optical) sound movies. The beginning amateur isn't likely to be tackling this for some while, but it is good to know that sound can be recorded at home on your own movies when you're ready for it. The magnetic recording device and picture projector are all in one machine: cost for 16mm is about $700, for 8mm about $400.

Screens: The type of screen you want is the one which you'll use the most. If you carry your movies and slides out visiting, you need a portable tripod screen. Price ranges from about $14 (for 30 x 40 inch size) to as much as $100 (72 x 96 inches). The tripod models are easy to handle, and have the advantage of being completely self-sufficient.

Hanging screens, however, are for more or less permanent use in one place. I show films quite often at home, for work and for fun, and I make it a consistent practice to do all my movie viewing in the same room. The hanging screen is perfect for me: it stays rolled up under the window valance, and I have only to pull it down or up at the proper times. Of course, hanging screens can be taken down and put somewhere else, just like a picture, but they need to be hung on especially spaced nails. And, for that matter, tripod screens can be set up over and over again in the same place. Hanging screens are somewhat less expensive than those with the tripod apparatus, but your decision should rest with the way you'll use your screen most often.

Another consideration is this: Should your screen be rectangular or square? If you show movies most of all, get a rectangular screen. If projecting slides is your major concern, get a square one. In both

And, oh, what a boost it gives your sagging budget when you can write off the biggest food bill of the year in November or even October!

I even carry this a step further and plan my table decoration with both feasts in mind. I believe in having everyone sit at one large table for Thanksgiving and Christmas. If your table will not seat the whole family, you can get some plywood and put it on top of the table as an extender. I use the same large tablecloth for both occasions—simply green yardage bought at a local store and hemmed. I just switch the decorating motif a little—autumn leaves, fruits and nuts are the scheme for Thanksgiving, pine cones and Christmas tree ornaments for Christmas, all very effective on the same cloth.

There were sixteen at my November-planned Christmas dinner last year, ranging in age from eight to eighty. Since I do most of my own work and it's next to impossible to get in extra help at Christmas, I had to plan this carefully so as to minimize my own labor. The larger the party, the simpler you have to make it in service and courses, so I went through a process of elimination. For instance, no butter plates and no glasses in my place settings. We serve champagne cocktails and invite the guests to bring their glasses to the table, then continue with champagne throughout the dinner. Even the "littlies" have "busy water," as my youngsters used to call sparkling soda or ginger ale.

For this large a group we have just the main course and dessert. And no fussy hors d'oeuvres with the cocktails! Instead, I serve such simple but colorful tidbits as stuffed green olives (you can marinate them to make them tastier), artichoke hearts marinated with herbs and capers, and some rather special pistachio nuts, packed by the Philibosian Orchards at Elk Grove, Calif., which are simply delicious besides being a nice Christmassy green conversation item.

If you are having eight to twelve for Christmas, one turkey and one casserole of each vegetable will be enough. But if your party is larger, better have two turkeys and two casseroles of everything. This speeds up the serving and lets your guests enjoy hot, hot food, and there's no polite waiting while the food gets cold. Even for a small group, I set casseroles at separate ends of the table so there won't be a bottleneck in the self-service.

Last year for the party I bought two gay red-and-white-striped chef's aprons and hats for the two men who carved the two turkeys. It added a lot of fun to the party when my husband entered, all dressed up, carrying the bird.

At our family feasts, instead of having a spoken grace we all sing the Doxology. It's a heart-warming custom, for then all of us, even the smallest, can join together in the hymn of praise.

As the men carve the turkeys and more champagne is passed, I bring in the casseroles of vegetables. And let me tell you they are always served from pretty stove-to-table ware because I am militantly opposed to any extra and unnecessary dishwashing.

My Christmas menu consists of the simple tidbits which I've mentioned, the turkeys, cranberry sauce, frozen green beans with canned whole small onions, beets with sherried butter and chopped parsley (there's that color scheme again!). I don't bother with potatoes because they're too much effort and much too filling with a big dinner. But I do include rolls and a light salad of mixed lettuces. For dessert we have chestnuts, flamed and served with ice cream, and fruit cake.

Champagne can be any good California variety such as Almaden, Demi-Sec or Sweet; Cresta Blanca, Demi-Sec or Sweet; Santa Rosa, Demi-Sec, 1951. As you can tell, I like it sweet. But you may prefer dry champagne—many people do.

Notice that all these things, except lettuce, can be purchased at any time and kept indefinitely. That's what makes my system work so well. Here, for instance, is what I would buy at Thanksgiving time for this 16-guest Christmas dinner.

Tidbits

2 cans of Philibosian Orchards pistachio nuts
2 jars of S. & W. artichoke hearts
1 large jar of stuffed green olives

Main course

2 15-lb. turkeys
6 cans of S. & W. baby beets
6 packages of Birds Eye frozen green beans, frenched
2 cans or bottles of small white whole onions (I use O & C Small Onions, packed by Olney & Carpenter, Wolcott, N. Y., or York County Dutch Fancy Whole Onions, packed by Hungerford Packing Co., York Co., Pa.)
3 packages of fresh cranberries (I prefer to make sauce from fresh cranberries, following the cooking directions on the package.)
24 to 30 Brown 'n' Serve rolls or 2 or 3 packages of hot roll mix

Dessert

Dried chestnuts, enough to fill 4 cups generously. I buy mine at an Italian market, but you might prefer 2 or 3 cans of whole cooked chestnuts in water, put up by Clement Faugier, Privas, France. Just drain them and they're ready for the sauce.

Ice cream—the richest, creamiest vanilla ice cream possible. I don't really buy this specially because I keep gallon containers of it always on hand in the freezer.

Fruit cake

Here are the time-consuming and messy things you can get out of the way a month before dinner if you do them at Thanksgiving. You can clean the turkey (do not stuff it), mix the stuffing, make the gravy, prepare the cranberry sauce, bake your quick-mix rolls, and concoct the chestnut dessert sauce. Then into the freezer with the whole lot of them!

The big item is the turkey. I prefer two smaller hen turkeys, around 15 lbs. each, to the traditional grand old monster bird, for the smaller ones are more succulent and juicy. You might be able to get an especially good buy from your butcher at Thanksgiving time if you order several turkeys.

Have the butcher "draw" the turkeys immediately upon receiving them. I prefer to have mine drawn when killed so I usually get them in the country. The neck should be cut off as close to the body as possible, and the tendons in the legs pulled out. Have the neck, heart, gizzard and liver wrapped in a separate package as these make your gravy.

Clean the turkeys with a damp cloth. If the cavity smells strong, wash with water in which a tablespoon of soda has been dissolved. Dry with a cloth, check for pin feathers. You may need a small sharp knife and a strong thumb if the butcher did not clean them thoroughly. Be sure to remove oil sac at the base of the tail. Weigh the birds and tag them so you will know how long to cook them.

Now put turkeys into plastic bags for freezing. Press out the air, close bag, twist end to tighten and close with an elastic band. Freeze as quickly as possible. Most home freezers are not able to freeze two turkeys quickly enough, so it is advisable to take them to your local freezer, have them put them in the quickfreeze, and pick them up in a few days.

For stuffing a 15-pound turkey you will need:

1 cup chopped onions, well sugared
1 cup chopped carrots
1 cup chopped celery
1 cup chopped parsley
1 cup coarsely chopped mixed nuts (no peanuts)
1 cup bread crumbs, sourdough French if possible
1 small apple chopped
1 teaspoon Spice Islands Beau Monde seasoning
1 teaspoon, rounded, brown sugar
1 teaspoon M.S.G. (monosodium glutamate)
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon Spice Islands Java Cracked Pepper
¼ lb. melted butter
1 good-size clove of garlic, run through garlic press

Now you can see that if you chop all these ingredients at one time you will save yourself a lot of time and effort. And you will have all the work done in one big operation. I use Pyrex pitchers for ease of measurement. Chop the onions first, as they have to steep in sugar. Sugar each layer of onions as you chop them and put them in a separate pitcher. This sugaring takes out all the "sting" from the onions and makes them milder and sweeter. Set aside and let them stand while you are chopping the rest of the vegetables. If you are doing four birds at once, you will need four cups of each vegetable.

Melt the butter, mix your dry ingredients—the bread crumbs and seasonings—in a large bowl. When they are well stirred, add the chopped ingredients. Drain the juice off the onions, using a sieve, and add the drained onions to the dressing. Mix with a light touch. I stir my dressing with a wooden spoon and turn it over rather than use a heavy or patting motion. This keeps the dressing light. Drizzle in the melted butter and then taste. The kids love to taste it and add a dash of this or that. Put stuffing into a plastic bag and freeze.

While you are chopping away at the vegetables for the dressing, you might as well chop some and prepare your gravy, which is really a rich turkey soup. I whizz all the vegetables in the electric blender, for they not only impart a wonderful flavor, but they help thicken the sauce.

Simmer turkey parts for a couple of hours in a little water, cool and put in the refrigerator overnight so as to be able to remove the fat more easily. Skim off fat next day, remove neck, gizzard and heart and pour stock in the electric blender and whizz. Add chopped gizzard and heart and blend. If you like the addition of the liver, add to hot soup stock on the day of cookery and allow to cook for 15 minutes, and the next day add to blended brew. Store your gravy in freezer jars until ready for use. Sauces tend to lose flavor during freezing, so season your sauce after defrosting. All you have to do on the big day is to add the turkey drippings, as I'll explain later.

The day before Christmas I plan to transfer all the frozen things (except stuffing) to the refrigerator so that they'll thaw—the cranberry sauce, the gravy base, the string beans, and the chestnuts. Two days before, the lettuce can be washed, the salad dressing made and the olives and artichokes marinated. I usually have a roast, such as lamb, ham or beef for dinner that night so we can have a cold meat for Christmas Eve. Don't make a big production of Christmas Eve dinner, for you want to build up your energy and appetite for the big day.

Marinated Artichokes

You can use the same marinade for both olives and artichokes. Half good olive oil and half Widow's Mite vinegar, a very spicy and not too tart Creole vinegar, made by the Widow's Mite Company, Glendale, Missouri.

Drain the artichokes, rinse, and put them in a Pyrex pitcher with marinade to cover. Add two large cloves of garlic sliced in large slices and two to three tablespoons of chopped chives and the same amount of chopped parsely. Cover with foil wrap and put in refrigerator until ready to use. Capers are an added taste treat if you like them.

Marinated Olives

Marinate olives in a brew made of half Widow's Mite and half good olive oil. Garlic or Colman's mustard makes a good spicy flavor addition. Be sure to drain olives. It is not necessary to rinse them. These olives I keep in a covered glass jar—and covered by the marinade—in the refrigerator for weeks.

Salad

Get as many varieties as possible, allowing 4 to 6 heads of lettuce for 16.

Wash lettuce two days before Christmas. You will have to wash each leaf separately, so turn on the radio and enjoy it. If you can get only one kind of lettuce, try to add watercress or some other dark green leaf, such as baby spinach, to give color to your salad. (There's that color again!) After the salad ingredients are washed, put them in a tea towel, step into the yard and swing the towel around à la the Bendix motion to get rid of the excess water. Leave lettuce in the towel and store all in a large nylon bag in the refrigerator until ready to use.

Salad Dressing

This dressing can be made days ahead and allowed to meld. Keep in a corked bottle until ready to use. This makes it easy to mix, for all you have to do is shake it well.

2 cloves of shallots, or two green onions, tops and all
1 tablespoon white sugar
2 teaspoons Beau Monde seasoning, Spice Islands
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ginger
¼ teaspoon Java cracked pepper
⅔ cup white wine vinegar, Spice Islands
1½ cups good olive oil
1 tablespoon Bacardi Puerto Rican Rum

Run shallot or onion through garlic press or chop finely and put into a mortar. Add sugar, then dry ingredients and mash the shallot with a pestle. Add vinegar and put into Pyrex pitcher for ease of measurement. Add oil and rum and stir vigorously. Put into bottle until ready to use. Shake well before adding to your salad.

When you are chopping the parsley and chives for your beets, chop more at the same time for your salad. If you cannot get fresh herbs, put some dried ones in the dressing, for your salad will be more interesting with chopped herbs, not only in taste but in appearance.

Actually, when you are chopping the herbs for the marinade of the artichokes, you could chop all the parsley and chives at the same time. For they will keep fresh in a tightly sealed container in the refrigerator for two or more days.

Marrons Flambé

For this glamorous dessert you will need chestnuts, rum, fruit cake and a rich ice cream. This dreamy dessert is one you can serve any time, if you keep a supply of chestnut sauce in the freezer.

For eight you will need two heaping cups of dried chestnuts. Soak overnight in cold water. They will swell to nearly four cups. Simmer at low heat until done, from 45 minutes to an hour. They should be tender but not allowed to fall apart. Make a sauce of the following:

3 cups water
1 cup white sugar
½ cup dark brown sugar
2 sticks an inch long each of vanilla bean (this is not needed, but it adds to the flavor)
4 tablespoons dark rum (I use Bacardi Puerto Rican)

Boil water, sugar and vanilla bean at a rolling boil for 15 minutes or until it is reduced to 2½ cups. This makes a syrupy sauce. Take out vanilla bean and add the rum. Put drained chestnuts in sauce, either canned or freshly cooked ones. Bring back to a boil, then turn heat very low for five minutes. Be sure sauce covers chestnuts. Allow this to cool overnight and then freeze. When you remove from freezer and heat for the dessert, add two more tablespoons of rum.

To serve this dessert you will need two platters, one for the chestnuts and one for the ice cream. It can be served either at the buffet table or at one end of the dinner table. Pass the filled plates. Kiddies don't like strong flavors, so give them just the ice cream and cake, with perhaps one chestnut but no sauce.

A word to the wise—do not pour rum from the bottle for the flaming dessert. The liquor in the bottle might catch fire with very dangerous results.

Heat half a cup of rum in a sauce pan, pour it in a pitcher and put on a small tray with matches and bring it to the table to add to the flaming chestnuts. The rum must be warm or it will not light. If you light the chestnuts in the kitchen and bring in the flaming platter it is very exciting especially for the "littlies" who love anything like this. To assure yourself that the dish will stay lighted from the kitchen to the table, bury half an egg shell in the top of the mound of chestnuts, pour warm rum in it and light it. It will last for some minutes and just caution your husband not to serve the egg shell to any guest. It is fun to watch the ceremony of spooning the warm rum over the chestnuts and your husband can make quite a production of it. It is better to have the ice cream in a side bowl so it won't melt too quickly. Arrange the fruit cake, cut in thin slices around the chestnuts and flambé that also, for flaming gives it an added flavor.

Our Christmas day routine is always the same. In the morning we have a breakfast that has mostly been prepared the day before. We are so busy opening presents that I just set up a buffet and people help themselves when they wish. Baked apples, a cheese fondue, and sausages can all be on one plate, as each complements the other. We also have egg nogs, so the morning is a gay one.

Before we go to church, I put the turkeys in the oven, for we have only the hearty breakfast and then our big feast at 5:30 or 6:00.

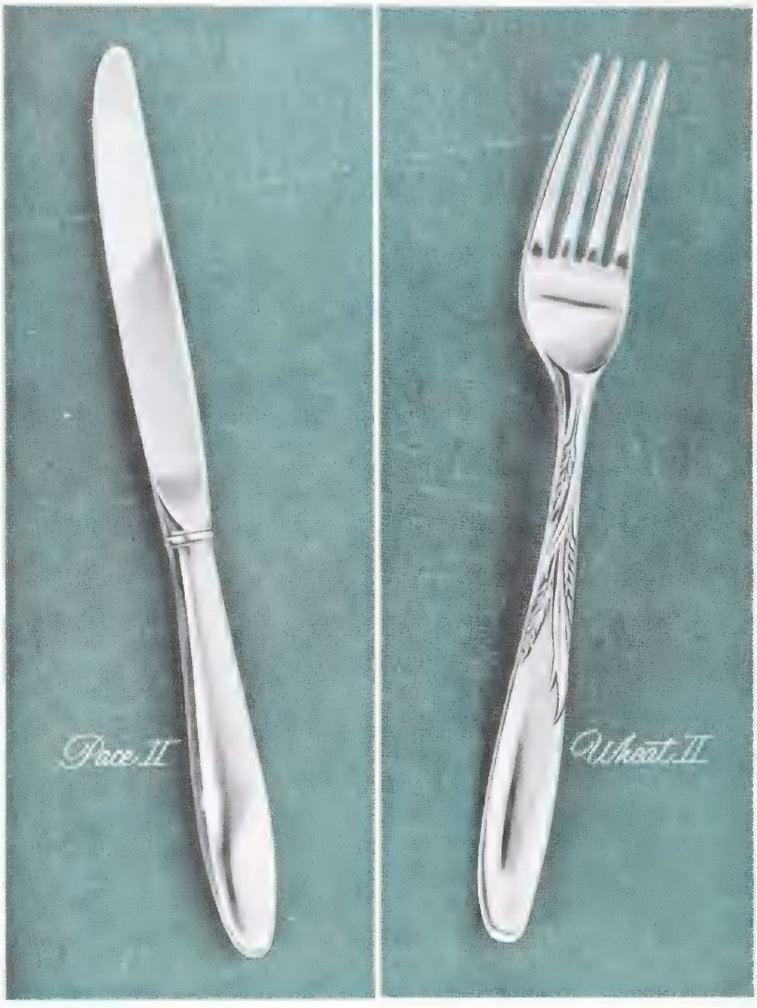
Turkey

Remove the turkeys from the plastic bags. Butter well, all over. Remove stuffing from the plastic bag and crumble it. Stuff the turkeys by putting the dressing in lightly. It needs space to expand, so fill the cavities only a little more than three quarters full. Never press the dressing into the bird, or it may turn out to be a soggy "dull thud." I fill the front cavity first and skewer the skin loosely over the opening with metal skewers. Then I stuff the big cavity and close the opening with the skewers, but sometimes I need the "heel" of a loaf of bread to hold the stuffing in, so be prepared.

Cover turkeys with softened butter, rubbing it in as well as you can. Melt a cube of butter, saturate clean cloth (to be thrown away after turkey is done) with butter. Put buttered turkey in the roasting pan, breast side down. This is an important point, for by cooking it breast down, all the juices and flavor seep downward into the breast and make the white meat wonderfully succulent. Cover with buttered cloth and put in 300° F. oven, allowing 25 minutes per pound for turkey under 12 pounds and 20 minutes per pound for bird over 12 pounds. Since the dressing is still frozen, you may have to cook it a little longer.

Half an hour before you are ready to serve the turkeys, take them out of the oven and pour most of the liquid from pan into Pyrex pitcher. Check turkey for brownness, and if necessary turn bird over, discard cloth and allow to brown. When grease from drippings has reached the top of the liquid, pour off slowly so that the turkey drippings can be added to the gravy base, without the fat. Allow five crackers to each cup of gravy liquid, blend in the blender, heat and stir a couple of times. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Be sure to heat the sauce in the same container you serve it in. Gravy is the hardest to keep hot and nothing is worse than cold gravy.

Decorate turkey with parsley, small red apples or crab apples. Cranberries strung like bracelets for the ends of the legs add a fun note, or do what Poppy Cannon suggested last year: Take gold lining out of your Christmas card envelopes and make paper ends for the legs. It is easier for the carver if you provide a hot side plate so that he can put the turkey slices on it as he carves.



String Beans with Onions

For 16 you will need six cartons of frozen string beans and 2 jars of onions. I will give you the recipe for eight, however, for you just double the ingredients, dividing them equally between two casseroles.

3 cartons frozen frenched string beans, Bird's Eye
1 jar or can of small white onions
½ cube of butter
½ teaspoon Beau Monde seasoning, Spice Islands
1 teaspoon dark brown sugar
⅛ teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper

Brown butter in casserole, add seasonings. Add string beans and drained canned onions. Be sure to save the juice of the onions for a soup base later on in the week. Cover and heat to bubbling, stir well to get browned butter well mixed, and your vegetable is ready to serve.

Beets Au Sherry

3 cans of whole baby beets
⅛ lb. butter
3 heaping tablespoons chopped parsley
3 heaping tablespoons chopped chives or finely minced scallions
3 tablespoons good sherry (Pedro Domecq's La Ina or Dry Sack by Williams & Humbert)

Heat butter to bubbling. Drain beets. (Be sure to save juice to combine with onion juice for a quick "Bortsch soup" later on in the week.) Add drained beets to bubbling butter, cover and heat for five minutes. Stir once or twice to get all beets buttered, add sherry, chives, and parsley and bring to the table in the same container that you heated them in.

The cranberry sauce, which has been made at Thanksgiving, is all ready to serve.

Put the rolls in the oven. If you are using the "Brown 'n' Serve" kind, be sure to melt butter in the pan in which they are to be browned. Roll each roll in the melted butter, for that gives a homemade flavor to them. We really use butter on this day, so you might as well decide to make your mind a blank regarding this little bit of extravagance and order an extra pound or two.

It is easier for the serving problem to have a bottle of champagne at each end of the table. And if you can have an ice bucket with extra champagne on the serving table, it makes things simpler than having to run out to the refrigerator for refills.

I delegate the work of clearing the table to my two daughters while I fix the dessert. Take your dinner leisurely. Do not get flustered, but keep the tempo down. When guests feel relaxed, you will enjoy it so much more. Don't hurry, for it is Christmas—and here's wishing a merry one to all of you!

THE ART OF GIVING

place in his fireplace wall or in the wall of one of the bathrooms. (We would.)

There it is. We think we are buying what our friends would buy for themselves. And as we get them these things, we are enjoying the sensation of traveling outside our everyday self into hitherto closed private orbits. We have put ourselves into their real situation and have reacted as if we were they.

How does this apply to our year-round life? Very simply. First of all, it tells us a good deal about ourselves. We discover some of the many lives slumbering inside us as we ponder the lives of our friends. Secondly, we force ourselves into attitudes of awareness. Shopping for a gift for our gardening friend, we see possibilities for him we probably might never have seen if he didn't exist in our minds.

Now, whatever we do, wherever we go, no matter whether Christmas threatens or not, we can continue to exercise an attitude of awareness. We can keep our many lives more active, and indulge their various needs. We can always see things for our own homes: standard items that we might use in a non-standard, non-routine way, things that we might adapt to uses not dreamed of originally, second-hand or antique objects like a carved ornament that can be converted into a headboard, and so on. The possibilities are endless; as endless as the possibilities in ourselves. A Christmas Gift for the World's Children

PHOTOGRAPH BY TED KOEPPER

When you send a Christmas card from the series, "Joy for the World's Children," you give a gift to underprivileged children throughout the world.

The United Nation's Children's Fund sale of these winsome, colorful cards, above, helps finance its efforts to bring better health to sick and undernourished children in 80 countries. Last year UNICEF netted $100,000 from selling cards in 18 countries—enough money, for example, to provide vaccine for immunization of 2,400,000 youngsters against tuberculosis.

Designed by Roger Duvoisin, a Swiss-born American illustrator of children's books, the cards come with season's greetings imprinted in the UN's five official languages, or may be had blank. Not shown here, a card with United Nations Headquarters magnificently photographed in the pastels of sunrise, by Erwin Blumenfeld, is available for $1 for a box of ten. Cards shown are the same price. Order from the UNICEF Greeting Card Fund, United Nations, New York.

Old-fashioned fried apples and sausages are new as next year cooked on the Arvin Lectric Cook-All (Arvin Industries, Columbus, Indiana). With the most minor adjustments it's a waffle iron, a baker or a double griddle providing signal-lighted heat from 150° to 500°. Cook Swift's new Brown'N'Serve sausage links on one side in 3 minutes! Fry on the other side tart, hard apples, unpeeled but cored and sliced or sectioned. For 6 apples use 2 tablespoons butter or bacon fat: brown at 350°. Sprinkle with ½ cup dark brown sugar, a few grains of salt. Cover and cook at 300° till tender. Recipe makes 5 or 6 servings.

Grand Central oyster stew, a world-famous Christmas Eve dish, is translated to use Dulany's quick-frozen oysters in Poppy Cannon's Bride's Cookbook (Henry Holt, New York). The perfect utensil is a burnished brass Tricolator Electric Chafing Dish (The Tricolator Co., Newark, N. J.). Set dial at high: melt 2 tablespoons butter in top pan: add 2 packages quick-frozen oysters thawed just enough to separate, 4 dashes Worcestershire, black pepper, paprika, ½ teaspoon salt. Cook until oysters begin to curl. Add 6 cups milk or use half milk, half cream. For a Croesus-rich stew—all cream! Heat, but never let milk boil. Serve in 4 or 6 large bowls, each topped with a butter curl and more paprika.

Presto Stir-Fry Chinese Cabbage—one of the most ancient and delightful ways to prepare any kind of cabbage, greens, peas, onions or celery. Set heat at highest point; add 3 tablespoons Hi-Hat Peanut Oil, 2 teaspoons salt, 2 cloves garlic crushed. Cut one good-sized Chinese cabbage into 1-inch sections; add white part and stem to hot oil. Cook 2 minutes; add any green leaves; cook another minute, stirring 2 or 3 times. Combine ½ cup water, 1 teaspoon light soy sauce or Kitchen Bouquet, 2 teaspoons Accent, 2 teaspoons sugar, 1 teaspoon crushed fresh ginger or ¼ teaspoon powdered ginger, 2 tablespoons Cinzano, 2 teaspoons cornstarch. Add to cabbage; stir thoroughly; cover; cook 2 minutes. Keep hot at lowest heat. Serve directly from the skillet. Serves 4 to 6. (National Presto Industries, Inc., Eau Claire, Wis.)

That glamorized pressure cooker on page 144 is known unromantically as a canning-size cooker, but it's the only size for the lady who cooks for adoring hordes or in quantities to stock her freezer, with goulash and fricassees, pot au feu or plain boiled dinners, sauerbraten and ragout. Anything that simmers or stews can be cooked perfectly in one-third to one-fourth the usual time. And custards, though it's hard to believe, are incredibly delicate and smooth with a glassy, firm texture that French chefs strive for. Well worth sending as part of your gift, this magical recipe for Crèmes Caramel: Pour into a shallow pan ½ cup Zeste Morestin; cook uncovered at high heat until full of big bubbles. Pour syrup into 6 custard or pot de crème cups. Combine 3 eggs slightly beaten with 1½ cups rich milk, 3 tablespoons sugar, 2 tablespoons rum, ¼ teaspoon salt. Pour into cups, cover with wax paper or foil and tie with a string. Put on rack in pressure cooker, cover bottom of pan with water about ¼-inch deep. Cook under 5 pounds pressure 3 minutes; reduce pressure immediately.

Delectable cookies are more welcome if accompanied by directions that make it possible to revive the experience at will. Write them on a Christmas card to go along with that blender and nut dish: "Finely grind ¾ cup unblanched almonds, filberts or brazil nuts, using low speed on the Osterizer. Now add 1 egg, ½ cup very soft butter, ½ cup sugar, 1 teaspoon almond extract, 1 teaspoon grated lemon peel. Blend until creamy. Sift together in a mixing bowl 2 cups Gold Medal flour, ½ teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon cloves, ½ teaspoon nutmeg. Add blended liquids, stir well, form into long oval-shaped rolls and chill several hours or overnight. Slice; sprinkle lightly with chopped nuts. Bake on greased cooky sheet at 350° 5 to 8 minutes till gently browned. C you can roll and cut cookie These freeze admirably, bake or unbaked."

Highway to Acapulco

Going to Mexico? The American Automobile Association reports that the new, much touted and long-time-acoming expressway is already a fact as far as Iguala, 113.7 miles from Mexico City, including the 59 miles of toll expressway between Mexico City and Cuernavaca. Beyond Iguala it is still under construction, probably to be finished by spring. But if you're heading for Acapulco, you can take the old road from Iguala and still cut down the former driving time from eight hours to six.

Winter Wear

Here is some sound advice for the smart ones who are thriftily touring Europe this winter and want to be well and comfortably dressed. Jane Kilbourne, Pan American World Airways travel advisor, suggests you take along a heavy coat or fur wrap and a raincoat, for temperatures that vary from very cold to cool and to fend off the inevitable dampness and rain. For gala evenings at the theater, opera or night clubbing, a short evening dress plus a long skirt and dressy blouse or evening sweater. Mind you, Europe has a different concept of central heating from ours, often keeps its homes and hotels what may seem to you as just plain chilly. Basic equipment for Northern Europe—Scandinavia, Scotland, North Germany, Austria and Switzerland where it averages 37 degrees—is the warm, woolen wardrobe of a suit, a dress, sweaters and stoles. Central Europe—France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Ireland, Northern Italy, and Turkey—averages 42, just right for that good dark suit and that little black dress. In Southern Europe—the French Riviera, Spain, Portugal, Rome and Southern Italy—it will average about 53, calling for a silk or lightweight wool suit for daytime, a wrap or fur stole for cool mornings and evenings, plus a resort-type dress or two and a pretty sweater to throw around your shoulders.

Super Ghost Town

Walter Knott, owner of Knott's Berry Farm at Buena Park, 22 miles outside of Los Angeles, has synthesized the spirit and architecture of every Gold Rush mining town that ever was in one wonderful rebuilt ghost town out on his berry ranch. He has gathered together all the essentials, even to moving whole buildings here, so what you see as a tourist is an authentic-looking community, four streets big, with a typical jail, saloon, gallows, assayer's office, etc. He's thoughtfully added two restaurants for steak and chicken dinners, Old West home-style. Meanwhile, pretty unghostlike old-timers put on demonstrations of panning for gold, the barmaids at the Calico Saloon swing their full skirts and long net stockings, just like the movies. There's a narrow-gauge railroad to go around town in, punctually held up on each trip by masked desperadoes, and the "melodrammer" at the Birdcage Theater resounds with hisses and cheers. All this is free from 12:30 to 9:30 daily.

Stocking Stuffers

Neatest fit we know for the toe of a Christmas stocking is a nice little envelope of tickets inviting you to leave home and see the world. Anyone who wants to can stuff our stocking with this, pre-wrapped by Hemphill Travel Service, 727 West Seventh St., Los Angeles 17—an 82-day New York to New York safari to Africa which will take you from the Cape to Cairo. Costs up toward $5,000, but while we're musing that doesn't seem much for an intimate acquaintance with Victoria Falls, the Belgian Congo, and all those other places we've dreamed about, especially when it's done by air, steamer and automobile. Tour leaves New York on January 11 or June 21.

Or we'd settle for that dreamboat round-the-world tour that Richard Joseph is master-minding. This leaves New York on January 6 and in the next 114 days visits France, Italy, Egypt, India, Ceylon, Singapore, Java, and Bali. Thai-

Spectator Golf

As if anyone needed a reason to visit Bermuda in the spring! But if you're a golf-addict, just look at this list of events scheduled to take place at the luxurious Mid-Ocean Club:

January 25-29—Mid-Ocean Ladies Invitation Tournament.

February 25-29—Bercanus Tournament for Men.

April 5-9—Bermuda Amateur Championship.

The Mid-Ocean course is six hundred beautifully turned-out acres, set like a gem in a shining blue-green sea which is visible from every hole. Five holes are either water holes or holes with water hazards, the rest duplicating to the last blade of grass the most famous holes at St. Andrews, the National, Lido. For data on Bermuda golf in general write the Secretary, Bermuda Golf Association, P.O. Box 433, Hamilton, Bermuda; on the Mid-Ocean Club in particular write William P. Ah, Bahia!

For Americans, Bahia was put on the map by Carmen Miranda and, according to many a skeptical traveler who has seen it, Brazil's fourth largest city won't let your romantic picture of it down. The Moore-McCormack Line recently made it a regular stop on their voyages down the east coast of South America. It's also a featured port on certain cruises, like the 106-day World Cruise the Cunard's elegant little "Caronia" starts on January 21. Churches of this 400-year-old city are notable for fine old wood carving and painted tiles; its early mansions are paragons of handsome iron grillework. Its festivals, particularly in January and February, are some of the most unusual in Latin America, religious in origin but colored by traditions straight from Portugal and Africa. For instance, mid-January on the feast of Our Lord of Bomfim, Bahians of all stations gather together with brooms and pails to wash down the church on the hill, as Bahians have been doing since 1754. And on February 2 every type of craft will throng the Rio Vermalho Bay to escort out to sea an annual gift to Yamanja, the African Mother of Waters.

Talk Nice, Talk Price

Coming to the aid of the woman whose husband is resisting her talk of a trip to Europe, the European Travel Commission, Box 258, New York 17, suggests she send for its own Calendar of Events. This, it guarantees, will go far toward diverting his attention from her own interest in Dior, hand-painted fruit plates, Renaissance chiffoniers.

Is his fetish sports cars? Point out that in Europe he can actually view the latest models, attend in person this rally and that, which are merely headlines at home. Does he dislike leaving his business? Let drop the name of one of those big European international trade fairs, good for new products, new methods, new contracts. Whatever his chief interests, Europe has something special. And not just during the summer.

The lady herself will be amazed to find how many of these events come along right now, when she holds her highest trump card—the little matter of Thrift Season rates. Any travel agent will supply examples. These low rates will actually be more advantageous this year than usual, applying not only on trans-Atlantic transportation, but in individual countries. Western Germany, for one, offers 5 to 25 per cent reductions at hotels and restaurants now through next March; in Italy, a 25 per cent saving in railroad and bus fares began November 1. Between such, and her Calendar to prove it's never dull in Europe, well—how can he help but be persuaded?

Here are a few scheduled events that could very well convince him. Brussels on January 15th is putting on its 38th Automobile and Bicycle Show in the Palais du Centenaire. In Dargor and Store Magleby, suburbs of Copenhagen, the traditional equestrian sport, "Beating the Cat out of the Bag," takes place February 20-21. In Oslo the famous Holmenkollen skiing competitions go on from February 27-March 6.

By JULIE POLSHEK

I recently tasted my way through six varieties of California green olives from a West Coast shop. It was a highly pleasurable experience and, equally pertinent, it made me realize that few of these interesting pitted-olive products are known beyond the confines of California. That's a situation that certainly should be rectified, which I hope to do by relating what's available and the ordering source.

The sextette in point comprises Kosher-style spiced olives, Kosher-style dilled olives, a salad olive packed in pimento-flavored brine, a savory variety called Holland Spiced, a spiced olive with sour tang and, finally, a mild-flavored pack intended primarily for use stuffed with cheese, caviar or what you will. The olives in each instance are firm and of fine quality.

They can be obtained from the shop which submitted them to me—Richard's Lido Market, Newport Beach, California. The group, shipped to localities east of the Mississippi, costs $6.30 postpaid; on shipments west of the Mississippi, the cost is $5.30.

The smoked salmon produced by Hegg & Hegg out in Washington is a delicacy worthy of gourmet attention. They ship the delectable fish whole, sealed in aluminum foil, and aside from the interest it may hold for your personal use, it affords a gift that will delight any food-lover. The smoking process is something Hegg & Hegg don't reveal aside from saying it's unique. But whatever it may be, the end result is succulent, flaky meat with the delicate texture of poached, fresh salmon. Choice salmon from Puget Sound fishing waters are the "raw product" and they have a wonderfully delicate flavor that's subtly infused with the rich smoke of alder-wood. All who partook of the fish submitted for tasting agreed that it was sumptuous fare. It's easily mashed into a paste for canapé-spreading, can be sliced for serving or flaked for use in casserole dishes. Refrigerated, the fish keeps for over a month. $7.45 provides the whole salmon (approximately 5-pound weight) or you can buy a half salmon for $3.95. (Add 50¢ to these postpaid prices for shipments to points east of the Rocky Mountains.) The address of Hegg & Hegg is Port Angeles, Washington.

Hilton's Oyster Stew isn't new, but somehow it came to my attention only recently and I'm losing no time in passing along word of the very fine product. It has the homemade savor so rare in inexpensive soups. Along with large slices of choice Pacific-coast oysters, you're supplied the butter for enrichening the stew. Hilton's pride themselves on the fact that the stew is prepared from oysters picked at the peak of their season and used immediately after they're opened. On this score I have only Hilton's word, but I can certainly vouch for the fact that they have a very superior product. You may find, as I did, that a dash of Tabasco and a mite of additional salt is called for; but I rather imagine Hilton's work on the premise that, having to cater to many palate preferences, it's better to under-season than over-season.

If your local shops don't carry the soup, you can order it by mail from Gimbel's, Herald Square, New York. The price is $4.44 per dozen 2-portion cans, plus the shipping charge.

If you're looking for an interesting food gift, make a note of Cranberry Delicacies. It's a gift-box containing seven superfine cranberry products made by Cranguyma Farms in Washington from fruit which they grow. One of the delicious products is a steamed cranberry pudding that has real homemade taste. The rich batter is molasses-flavored and lavishly stocked with whole cranberries. of the products. It's highly concentrated cranberry juice with a modicum of sweetening and has a wide range of uses that take in such things as sherbet, chiffon pies, gelatin desserts and salads, fruit-juice cocktails. Three unusual preserves are included in the box: in one cranberries are combined with blueberries, in another with raspberries, and in the third with strawberries. A jar of cranberry jelly, a can of jellied cranberry sauce and one of whole-berry sauce complete the assortment.

One needs only to taste these products to know that home-kitchen methods and fine recipes are used in making them. Also there's tasty proof of the Farm's contention that cranberries grown in this Pacific cranberry belt have a distinctive, especially rich flavor.

Another sea-food product obtainable from Gimbel's food department is a superb Cresca import from France. Mussels à la Sauce Poulette. In the delectable concoction you get butter-tender baby mussels dressed in a wondrous cream sauce flavored with shallots, lemon and white wine and enriched with eggs. The dish is essentially a hot hors d'oeuvre, but affords delicious chafing-dish fare for party purposes served on a bed of wild rice. Two of the 7½-ounce cans can be had from Gimbel's for $2.50 plus postage.

A reader of this column very kindly brought to my attention a unique Christmas cake, home-baked from an Italian recipe that dates back many generations. I'm told by Mrs. Zani who produces the cake that it's a regional recipe traditional for the Christmas holidays in Italy's Calabria province but, oddly enough, totally unknown in other sections of the country.

It's a crisp, rolled-up cake made of paper-thin yeast dough enriched with eggs, olive oil and white wine, and sweetened very slightly. Inside the layers of rolled dough there's a rich mixture of walnut bits and sugar subtly flavored with cinnamon and cloves. The honey and olive oil used to baste the cake during the slow baking gives the crust flavor and crispness that remind one of Armenian pastries. It all adds up to a very delicious end product. Though you keep the cake for a month or more, the crust remains as crisp and light as when fresh-baked and unlike any other yeast-dough cake I know, this one's flavor improves with age.

The Christmas season is ideal for throwing the editorial spotlight on Fru Fretts, delicious Swiss almond biscuits baked in decorative forms that resemble nuts, shells, acorns. The crisp cooky shells are made of gaufrette batter and inside is a sizable mound of rich cream chock-full of whole and crushed almonds. The tin box (12-ounce) in which they're packed has a decorative cover that's very festive in appearance: this and the delectable nature of the biscuits themselves make the product an apt suggestion for gifts. Fru Fretts cost 89¢ a box and can be ordered from Bloomingdale's, New York, N. Y. (Minimum mail order $2; price given does not include shipping charges.)

Carr's of England recently introduced a new water-biscuit product. Biscuit Cups, to hold hors d'oeuvres, caviar, or whatever canapé mixture you may fancy. To prevent oily or drippy fillings from seeping through, Carr's make these cupped biscuits of a somewhat denser dough than that found in their flat water biscuits. The crisp biscuits have fluted sides and measure about two inches across with depth enough to accommodate a goodly amount of filling. Don't think much need be said about the fine quality of Carr water biscuits except perhaps to mention how right their natural flavor quality is for canapés.

If Carr Biscuit Cups can't be found in your local food shops, you can order them by mail from Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York. Their postpaid price for two tins of the biscuits (48 to the tin) is $2.25. This shop can also supply Carr's new tea-biscuit assortment, Sampler Box. The decorative square tin in which the four pounds of biscuits are packed is lithographed on the top and sides with authentic reproductions of old-fashioned samplers. The contents include 12 varieties of fine cookies; some are cream-filled sandwiches, some plain wafers. The cost is $4.50 postpaid.

Charlotte Charles has a brand-new confection. Frozen Diaquiris, very festive and very delicious. They're coconut-covered mounds of a creamy, fondant-like mixture spiked with a blend of rums. It's an ideal thing to pass with demitasse. The 1-pound tin is decorated in very interesting fashion with tropical motifs. If your local shops don't have the product, mail orders will be filled by B. Altman & Co., Fifth Ave. at 34th St., New York, at a price of $2.50 for two tins.

Luau sliced papaya is the only commercial brand I've encountered that preserves the fresh quality of the fruit. It's packed in Hawaii, and you can tell from its rich flavor that it has been tree-ripened. The slices are about the size of a peach half, preserved in a way that does away with the mushy, limp texture so often found in papaya products. A mite of pineapple juice used in the processing gives both the fruit and syrup a subtle fillip. Vendome Inc. can supply the product by mail. Their address is 415 Madison Ave., New York, and their postpaid price for three 1-pound jars of Luau Papaya is $2.50.

If you're a honey fancier, you may, while you're ordering the papaya, want to include the Bavarian Pinewood Honey carried by this same shop. It's an unusually full-bodied variety of honey with an aroma as delightful as its taste. Unlike the usual honey, this one is subjected to neither filtration nor heating: it's what is known as "raw" honey and has a consistency almost like that of fudge before it's beaten for hardening. A 17-ounce jar of the Hans Genge Bavarian Honey costs $2.10 postpaid. Vendome has a wide choice of other unusual honeys, information on which can be obtained by writing to the shop.

Reese Pickled Brussels Sprouts offers a new use of this vegetable with considerable come-hither as a cocktail snack; it also has interesting salad possibilities. Even if you don't care for Brussels sprouts in conventional, cooked state, you may relish these pickled ones. The pickling agent, which includes a noticeable garlic accent, endows the vegetable with a savory tang that makes quite a taste difference. Another source of munching pleasure is the crisp texture—almost like biting into a gherkin.

Still another interesting Reese candidate for your cocktail tray is their unusually tasty appetizer, in which potato and cheddar cheese are united. The crisp curls are a baked product, an asset both flavor- and calorie-wise. The tidbits taste much like potato chips, and the cheese contributes a subtle taste.

Mail orders for both these Reese products can be directed to B. Altman & Co., Fifth Ave. at 34th St., New York. The price of the Brussels sprouts is $1.45 for 2 jars; of the Reesestraw, $1.95 for 3 tins. (Postage extra in both instances.)

Florida baby oranges and tangerines from the same locale are used in a very tasty manner in a pair of Chef-Aide products. The fruit in both instances is whole. The oranges are in heavy syrup and, aside from their tastiness as a dessert fruit course, are a fine ingredient in sliced or cut-up form for fruit salads, gelatin concoctions, duck garnishing and the like. The tangerine product is spiced, an interesting change from the conventional spiced fruits.

Should you be unable to find these products in your local shops, Chef-Aide Products will mail-order them on a minimum order for eight jars. Price of baby oranges is 55 cents a jar; of spiced tangerines, 75 cents.

intuition, even though, like most rules in the arts, they are very much of thumb. And they can be boiled down into a five-point check list.

First, dimensions. We should never forget that the ideal size for a reproduction is not the size of the wall space we may wish to cover, but the exact size of the original painting. Now of course Parnassus won't fall on us if we break this rule by a few inches, but it's no good trying to bring home the Sistine Chapel. A print which reduces Michelangelo's giant athletes to gesticulating Lilliputians may be useful for identification, like a passport photograph, but it doesn't belong in the imaginary museum I'm talking about.

And we should beware also of the perverse simper, that wrong-end-of-the-telescope charm, which miniature reproductions often have, especially in the company of full-size copies of other pictures. Botticelli's Venus is a goddess, not an elf, and she should not be overshadowed by one of Cezanne's sweet peas.

Second, value—in the painter's sense. The subtle relation of one part of a picture to another part in respect to lightness and darkness is frequently destroyed when a careless workman adds color to a reproduction, and we should be particularly alert if our copy is comparatively small. Strange and sad alterations can occur when a Rembrandt's smoldering pools of shadow are shrunk.

Value infidelity can often be detected by a comparison of the color print with a black and white photograph of the painting. (The relative accuracy of plain photographs in this category is one reason why some critics still prefer them as documents in their books. They have a point, although I am against sacrificing color to make it.)

Third, color. Unfaithfulness in this quality is difficult to prove in the absence of the original work, and of course it cannot usually be isolated from the question of value. Still, there are at least two telltale signs which should arouse our suspicions.

One is smallness again. A large patch of Rubens' flesh tone cannot be reduced to postcard dimensions without a change in hue and saturation and, even if it could, the psychological impact, that pneumatic effulgence, would be considerably weakened.

The other is lack of balance. One of the most common sins of printmakers is to force a single color into slick vividness and then let it seep into every detail. The effect is rather like that of a jukebox which seems to be all bull fiddle. Not even Gainsborough's famous boy should throb and whisper blue, blue, blue until our migraine comes back.

Fourth, texture. A live painting is not only an image created by lines, colors and values; it is also a solid object whose substances affect us directly, as well as indirectly, through their influence on color and value. Obviously, ink on paper cannot imitate the thick pigment and coarse canvas of Van Gogh's oil version of the "L'Anglois Bridge at Arles" as accurately as it can his gouache treatment of the same subject.

A finicky collector will buy a reproduction of the gouache. But if we want a copy of the oil, as we may for a variety of good reasons, we should look for the best illusion of texture available, for without it an important element in Van Gogh's characteristic resonance will be muted. And that brings up the:

Fifth point, technique. I know there are color prints which offer something more than a humble illusion of texture, which give us the "real thing," with a dab of rough paint here and a dab there. Some are not bad, but I am against them on principle, just as I would be against having a real bassoon tooted from time to time during the playing of a recorded symphony. A reproduction should be an honest, properly controlled translation, and nothing more. Only the painter of the original can make a replica.

Today excellent color work is being done with tuned-up versions of all the older printing processes, as well as with the newer and more expensive silk screen and pochoir (that's a very refined sort of stencil) techniques. The home curator doesn't need to be an expert on all these different methods, but to ignore them completely would be like trying to collect original pictures without knowing the difference between a water color and an oil. And we ought to remember, too, that the best prints, like the best of most modern products, are apt to be those on which a conscientious craftsman and a precise machine have collaborated, each correcting the other's errors.

There are plenty of such prints available. I hope this discussion of defects has not implied that the field is too limited for the fastidious. In fact, publishers' lists have now reached the point where we can specialize a bit, where we can plan our collections, and to do so is much more interesting than to let them just accumulate.

We can now, for example, fill the American wing in our imaginary museum with first-rate reproductions of representative works from all of our native schools. What should we put in it? Things we like, of course, but I can think of a dozen or so prints which I would argue ought to be the nucleus of such a collection, because of the quality of the originals and the fidelity of the copies.

PERHAPS I am going to be vetoed right at the start, but I would pass over Copley and pick Gilbert Stuart's scrupulously unflattering portrait of Mrs. Richard Yates, painted in 1793, as an example of our eighteenth-century realism and technical boldness. The print is published by the National Gallery of Art (addresses are listed at the end of this article). And next to it I would put Winslow Homer's 1864 "Croquet Scene," a solid study in values published by The Twin Editions. No Homeric seascape? All right, add his 1899 "Gulf Stream," published by David Ashley, Inc.

Still in the realist mood, I suggest "Will Schuster and Black Man Going Shooting" (Twin Editions), done in 1876 by Thomas Eakins—Walt Whitman's and a lot of other people's favorite painter. As a fine, roaring example of the "Ashcan School" we can take George Bellows' "Both Members of This Club" (1909), and we can round out this relentless-fact section of our exposition with one of Edward Hopper's desperately lonely dwellings, his 1934 "House on Pamet River." (Both published by the New York Graphic Society.)

Depressing? Let's turn to the amusing and naive—but hard-hitting—"Manchester Valley" (Museum of Modern Art) painted by Joseph Pickett some time during World War I. We need a reminder that primitivism is the oldest and liveliest tradition in American art. Then I would let my taste pendulum zoom way back and up to "Music and Literature" (1878, New York Graphic), one of William Harnett's trompe l'oeil stunners.

Now some poets. I vote for the profound, Oriental mystery of Morris Graves' "Wounded Gull" (1943, Willard Gallery), certainly one of the masterpieces of this century, and for the symbolic grandeur of Albert Ryder's Poe-like "Moonlit Cove" (1880-1890, New York Graphic). Also for "Circus Elephants" (1941, Twin Editions), by John Marin, the man who shattered our Victorian-damsel notion that water colors cannot be monumental. And for the winging geometry and light of Lyonel Feininger's "Gothic Spire" (1944, Willard Gallery, Esther Gentle Reproductions).

That's my basic dozen, but I would add two abstractions, or near abstractions. I find that most pictures of this sort cease to be abstract if I look at them long enough. I like the rugged "Mars, Orange and Green" (New York Graphic) of Arthur Dove, one of our pioneers in this style, and the trumpeting, not-so-abstract "Flower Abstraction" (1920, Esther Gentle) of Marsden Hartley. You don't? Well, being idiosyncratic is part of the pleasure in running one's own museum.

One thing more. Everyone who talks about color reproductions is required to say at some point, "Now don't neglect real painting." I don't know why; I have never heard of a collector of prints who did not wind up looking at and buying more, not fewer, original works, and I know of several who have bought painting kits and stopped being passive altogether. However, I see my duty. Let us not forget that our imaginary museum is only a side show, a device for beckoning ourselves in where the masterpieces appear in person.

UNESCO has published two useful catalogs of high-quality color reproductions selected by a jury of experts. National distributor is Columbia University Press, 2960 Broadway, New York 27, N.Y.

ARE WE NEXT, MR. VIVISECTOR?

"We know we aren't human; we're just dogs, but we have feelings, just like you. We sometimes hurt. We get hungry and thirsty. We can stand those things. But please spare us from vivisection. You've used us for hundreds of years. Millions of us have died in agony that you might test this or that. We've been baked and boiled, crushed and burned, cut and gassed—and little or nothing has been learned from us. You know we'd lay down our lives for you. We always have, when the occasion demanded, for that's the way dogs are. Maybe we'll live after you're through with your knife. Maybe we'll even get an anesthetic while the worst is going on, but there will come a time when we'll be conscious again. We can't tell you, then, how much we hurt, or where. We can only lie in our cages and suffer. Is vivisection really necessary? Can't you, wise and mighty men of science, find some way to help humanity without torturing us? Try . . . please. We didn't ask to be born. We can't say when or how we'll die. Those things are for you humans to decide. But we do ask, humbly and hopefully, if we can't have those things all dogs want—a home and loving master—give us the very least we deserve: a painless death."

No matter what you have been told about vivisection, IT IS an agonizing ordeal for animals. Anesthetics are not possible in certain kinds of work, for authentic figures prove subjects are put to sleep in only 5 of every 100 experiments. Unrestrained vivisection as an aid to medicine and surgery is questioned by a large number of physicians and surgeons, and many of them say it does more harm than good.

If you believe that medical students must use living animals for practice, you have been misinformed. Such vivisection has been forbidden by law in England since 1876, yet who would question the skill of British surgeons?

The cruelty of vivisection should be stopped. Unnecessary suffering has no place in our civilization. Just as anti-cruelty societies fight ordinary abuse of animals, we are battling laboratory cruelties—not the progress of medicine and science.

Do you want to help? Then join this society today—now, while you are thinking about it. Your contribution will be used to bring this same message to others. Eventually, we will be strong enough to end "the greatest of all cruelties."

The National Anti-Vivisection Society is a non-profit, charitable association chartered by the State of Illinois for nation-wide work, and recognized as an educational tax-exempt society by the United States Government. This organization has had its offices in the same downtown building in Chicago for 20 years, and inquiries about it to either the subscriptions committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce or similar organizations are cordially invited.

HOW YOU CAN HELP

You can help put vivisection in its place with other out-moded practices of the past by offering your support to the National Anti-Vivisection Society. You will be joining in the battle against laboratory abuses—not against the progress of medicine and science!

Mr. and Mrs. Duke Johnston who live on the beach in the Kahala district in Honolulu. I could use this whole article to tell you about the dreamy evening among the coconut palms, Kukui torches and soft Hawaiian music, but I think I'd better tell you about the dinner Cecile Johnston served us. I have never tasted anything as outstanding as the soya-sauced chicken. Cecile was good enough to give me a few of the best recipes of her Japanese cook, Rose Mise, and I am sure that your family and guests will be happy whenever you serve any of these dishes. The following basic sauce is used for both chicken and meat. It is enough for one or two pounds of meat, and can be increased accordingly.

Basic Soya Sauce Marinade

1 cup soya sauce
1 pinch M.S.G. (monosodium glutamate)
1 teaspoon sugar
1 tablespoon dry mustard
1 medium-sized onion, grated
1 tablespoon grated ginger root

First, mix mustard with enough water to make a paste. Add this and the grated onion and ginger to the soya sauce to which you have already added sugar and M.S.G. Let stand overnight for best results. If you can't buy fresh green ginger root, experiment with dried ginger root or ground dry ginger. It won't be the same and you can't use very much, so proceed with caution. It's better to start with a very small amount and work up.

Cecile Johnston's Barbecued Chicken

Pour Basic Soya Sauce Marinade over halves of chicken; let stand about an hour at room temperature. Broil over charcoal or under a pre-heated broiler 12 to 15 minutes, depending upon the size, then turn and continue brushing with remaining marinade as the chickens cook. Cook another 12 to 15 minutes until the skin is browned and crisp and the meat is tender. Serve immediately.

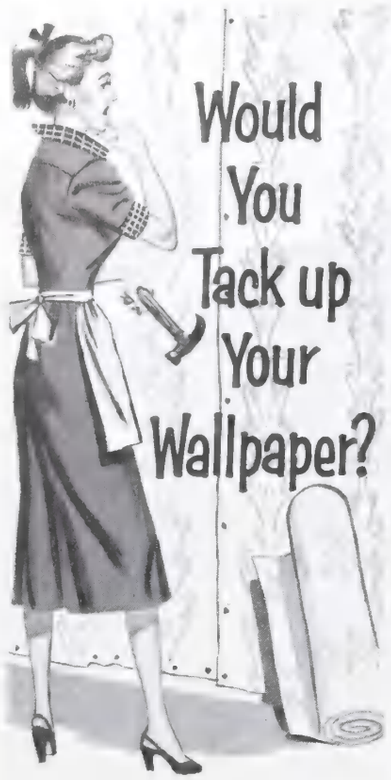
Meat-on-a-stick

Slice bite-size pieces of sirloin tip steak; skewer three or four pieces on bamboo sticks. Soak in Basic Soya Sauce Marinade about an hour, then broil. Serve as hors d'oeuvres.

Broiled Steak Soya

When preparing steak, soak in soya sauce in a glass or enameled pan about one hour at room temperature, (not in the refrigerator), turning meat at least once. For best results, cook over charcoal, but if you can't, go ahead and broil the steaks in your broiling oven. They'll still be delicious. And while we're on the subject of steak, one of my old favorites, Steak Hawaiian, illustrates perfectly the value of cooking with soya sauce. You'll find that your steak has better color and an indescribable flavor, and the fat has a crisp brownness that can't be beat.

Steak Hawaiian



Chop a clove of garlic very, very fine and put it in a large shallow glass baking dish or platter. Add one half to one cup of soya sauce and mix. Marinate your steak in this for 15 minutes, turning it to thoroughly impregnate the meat with the seasoning and soak up the sauce. Then barbecue or broil, as you prefer. (Don't marinate your steak in aluminum as the action of the soya sauce on the aluminum is apt to produce a disagreeable flavor.)

Getting back to Cecile Johnston's recipes, she gave me a recipe for fish hors d'oeuvres and a spare-rib recipe. Naturally fish is used a lot in Hawaii and this same recipe can be tried with various types of fish—whatever is available in your locality

Soya Sauce for Fish Hors d'Oeuvres

1 cup soya sauce
½ cup sugar
¼ cup prepared mustard
1 pinch M.S.G. (monosodium glutamate)

Slice bite-size pieces of raw fish and marinate in sauce. Broil or barbecue on a fine grate over charcoal. Serve on small squares of crisp toast.

Sauce for Spareribs

1 cup soya sauce
3 tablespoons brown sugar
1 egg-size piece of ginger, grated
1 teaspoon M.S.G.

Mix all ingredients together and let sauce stand overnight. Brush spareribs liberally with sauce; let stand at least an hour at room temperature, and broil or barbecue.

This is enough sauce for two pounds of spareribs.

A few nights after dining with the Johnstons we were guests of Ham and Carrie Guild who live out by Coconut Head in a new section right on the beach. If you are familiar with Honolulu, you will remember the old mullet ponds out by Coconut Head. There they have blasted all the coral and put in a beautiful fill so that there's a fine harbor and a place to swim. The Guilds live in true Tahitian style. Carrie is the author of Rainbow in Tahiti, a champion fisherman of marlin, a great gourmet. She loves to cook, uses soya sauce in a great many dishes like these:

1 pound steak
Soya sauce
½ cup chopped onion
1 cup sliced mushrooms
Butter
½ cup sour cream

Cut beef into thin strips and soak in soya sauce. Sauté onions and mushrooms in butter about two minutes. Remove from pan and brown meat strips in fat. Add onions and mushrooms and let simmer until meat is tender. Add sour cream just before serving.

Oil
1 cup sliced mushrooms
1 green onion, chopped
1 clove garlic, chopped very fine
2 tablespoons soya sauce
½ teaspoon candied ginger, chopped
1 tablespoon sesame seed
¼ cup water
Salt and pepper to taste
1 slightly beaten egg

Brown meat in oil, add mushrooms, onion, garlic, sesame seed and ginger. Season to taste and cook together for five minutes. Add water and cook until tender. Before serving, add slightly beaten egg and mix well to bind dish together lightly.

Broiled Chicken Breasts

Soya sauce
¼ cup melted butter

Let chicken breasts soak in soya sauce for ten minutes. Broil or barbecue, basting the breasts with butter as they cook.

Broiled Fish Fillets

Fillets of fish
Soya sauce
Lemon

Soak fillets in soya sauce about ten minutes. In the Islands they use Mahi Mahi, but on the mainland they use any locally obtained fish. Broil or barbecue, basting the fish with butter as it cooks. Sprinkle with lemon juice before serving.

Coconut Head Casserole

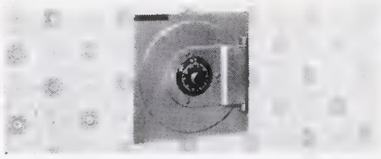
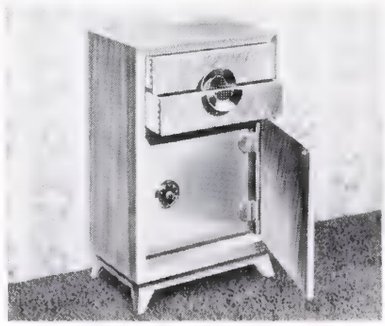
1 bunch green onions
6 slices bacon
1 large can mushrooms
½ cup soya sauce
1 can solid pack tuna



Cook noodles. Chop cleaned green onions coarsely, using all of the stems, but keeping the stems separate. Chop bacon and fry with white part of onions; add mushrooms and sauté lightly. Add soya sauce and equal amount of mushroom liquor; cover and let simmer about five minutes. Put noodles in buttered casserole dish, add tuna broken up, green onion tops, stir in bacon and mushroom mixture and broth, adding more soya sauce and mushroom liquor as necessary. Cover and bake in a slow oven about half an hour.

Duck Hawaiian



1 duck cut into serving pieces
1 cup soya sauce
1 teaspoon chopped fresh ginger
2 or 3 cloves garlic

HERRING · HALL · MARVIN SAFE CO.
HAMILTON, OHIO
World's largest maker of fire-resistive safes

1 can sliced pineapple

Mix soya sauce with ginger and garlic chopped very fine; marinate duck in soya sauce two to three hours at room temperature. Sauté in vegetable or peanut oil until golden brown. Arrange duck in casserole with juice from can of pineapple, mushrooms and strained soya sauce. Cover and bake until tender. Sauté pineapple in butter and serve with duck.

Kahala Fish Sauce

½ cup soya sauce
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon vinegar
1 tablespoon sugar
1 tablespoon onion juice
1 tablespoon catsup
Salt and pepper to taste

Use filets of any white fish. Season, dip in egg batter and cracker crumbs and sauté in butter until golden brown. Mix above ingredients and simmer; pour hot over fried fish to serve.

Several years ago I was served one of the most unusual and delicious fish dinners in my experience. The Chinese cook at the home of a friend of mine cooked a whole striped bass. He laid the fish gently in a court-bouillon, brought it to a boil, and let it simmer for about ten minutes. Then he let the fish poach in this boiling broth until it was sufficiently cool to serve—still hot but cool enough to handle. The fish was then skinned and placed on a platter and heated soya sauce poured over it, and the whole thing sprinkled with a quantity of finely sliced green onions. The soya sauce and the green onions were the only flavoring (besides the seasoned court-bouillon) on the fish and it was delicious.

In the years that I've been experimenting with soya sauce, I've dreamed up a few tidbits of my own. Sometime try eggs poached in soya sauce. For an epicurean hors d'oeuvre, dip halves of hot hard-cooked eggs in soya sauce and melted butter. Oysters and shrimp dipped in soya sauce and broiled or barbecued are delicious.

One thing I've observed, when cooking with soya sauce, it is advisable to have any meat or fowl, and especially fowl, as dry as possible before soaking or dipping it in soya sauce, and when herbs or other seasonings are used, add them first to the soya sauce.

The uses for soya sauce are endless. It is terrific on lamb—either on a roast or chops—with or without garlic, and you haven't lived until you've had barbecued, broiled or roasted squab which has been marinated in soya sauce and then basted with soya sauce and butter as it cooks.

In my opinion, soya sauce belongs at your stove—indoors or outdoors—right alongside the salt and pepper.

standing insured loan to arrange to have that mortgage "open-ended" by recording a simple modification agreement. If you have borrowed under such a mortgage and are planning improvements to your house for which you will need additional financing, it will be worthwhile discussing this possibility with your lender, for you will be likely to get your financing more cheaply in this manner than in any other.

FHA "open-ending" will be limited to kinds of improvements that definitely add to the livability and utility of the property. Expenditures of a frivolous sort which do not result in real increase in value will not be approved. Ordinarily, the additional borrowing may not be more than an amount equal to the principal payments already made. But where rooms are enlarged or new rooms added or installed, the advance may go above the original amount of the mortgage.

The Act also makes it more attractive for lenders to permit "open-ending" a mortgage guaranteed by the Veterans Administration. If you are a veteran who has already borrowed under a VA-guaranteed mortgage, but who has not required the full guarantee of 60% of value up to the top limit of $7,500, your lender will be enabled to make additional funds available to you under your mortgage and to have these guaranteed on the same basis as the original loan so long as the maximum guarantee limits are not exceeded.

Moreover, if you are a veteran who owns a house free and clear, you may apply your home loan guarantee privilege to a loan made for the purpose of making substantial improvements to your property.

PLAN YOUR MORTGAGE AS YOU PLAN YOUR HOUSE

The new law is thus designed to make it easier to buy a new house above the minimum price class, to make it easier to buy an older house, to make it easier to sell an existing house, and to make it easier to improve the value and livability of the house you live in or are moving into.

The greater flexibility and range of choice introduced into the mortgage systems by these measures gives you greater freedom in deciding just what sort of home transaction is best for you!

THERE are two other features of the legislation that are of interest to home buyers. First, it will now be possible for the buyer to obtain a copy of the FHA appraisal, if he has applied for an FHA-insured loan or if the seller already has an insured loan on the property. Such an appraisal, however, should not be considered conclusive as to the appropriate price of the property, since appraisal is by no means so exact as to eliminate the possibility of reasonable variation; and there may also be items covered by the price that are not included in the appraisal. However, the FHA appraisal is certainly at least a good clue to what the right price should be and, where there is a wide difference, the propriety of the price may well be questioned.

The second of the additional features is a requirement that, wherever a house has been approved for a loan insured by FHA or guaranteed by the Veterans Administration before the commencement of construction, the builder must place on file with the agency the approved plans and specifications of the house, including any approved changes, so that the buyer may fully know the sort of house he is getting. More than this, the builder must give a warranty that the house has been constructed in substantial conformity with the approved plans and specifications.

This provision can be a real protection against shoddy work. But the protection is not automatic. It is applicable only to defects that occur within a year after occupancy. The defects must represent substantial deviations from the approved plans and specifications, and the purchaser must make his claim in writing before the first year is over. Finally, if the builder is intractable, the buyer's recourse is a law suit. Neither FHA nor VA have responsibility for settling claims, although they may exert pressure on the builder in flagrant cases. Usually, however, the builder will remedy real deviations without coercion. The most important points to observe in connection with this new provision are: (1) See that the plans and specifications are adequate to give the quality you want—the warranty cannot go beyond what the specifications call for; (2) be sure of your ground before pressing a claim.

What has been described here are the most important features of the Housing Act of 1954 for home buyers and homeowners. In addition, FHA will continue to insure unsecured loans up to $2,500 for home repairs and modernization; and the Veterans Administration will continue its program of guaranteeing home loans for veterans of World War II and of service after June 1950.

popular since Arthur Godfrey has been strumming it. Bandinos are inexpensive. Banjoes, mandolins, and electric guitars all belong in this class; they are a little costlier, ranging from $20 to $200.

The Mouth Organ. Everybody knows this old, traditionally American instrument. In the past ten years, however, many improvements have been made in the instrument itself. It is not so easy to learn to play well, but again I say, you do not have to play it well. A small one costs around $3, a large chromatic one, about $25. Very good for a singing family.

English Concertina. This is a haunting, almost melancholy instrument, delicate and exquisite. Several movies have recently helped to popularize it. It is much easier to play than the regular accordion. It is also smaller in size and, therefore, one can carry it to picnics and outings. However, it is hardly an instrument that you can give children, because its reeds and mechanism are tiny and fragile. Strongly recommended for adults. Prices vary depending on quality.

The Song Flute. This is a toy instrument, and any child can learn it. It is used in many schools for pre-band training. It comes from the same family as that black sheep, the kazoo, and it costs only 75 cents.

Rhythm Maracas. A Cuban instrument, decorative and reasonably amusing, to mark the rhythms. (See Mambo Drums.) Cost for a good one is around $5.

Marimba. This instrument, like the xylophone, has an interesting, resonant tone. New lightweight marimbas are now available, designed especially for the beginner. They are small enough to be stuck in a closet.

Brass instruments, the standard ones, are not easy to play. However, you may know someone talented enough or ambitious enough to be made happy with the gift of one of the standard brass or woodwind family. What eloquent music they can make! And what an opportunity they give to a teenager to join the school band! A professional trombone costs around $200, a trumpet around $175, and a good saxophone around $300. The woodwinds begin at somewhat lower prices. A clarinet, quite a respectable one, will sell for around $100, and a flute for around $150. Smaller editions of these instruments are available for less cost.

Accordions (Vienna or Italian style) are good convivial instruments, though, as I have mentioned, they require considerable skill. I'd say the accordion stands on the borderline between the simple and the full-fledged instruments. A good accordion can be had for around $50.

The Lap Harp. This is an unusual instrument which has a beautiful tone and is considerably easier to play, to handle, and to keep in tune than the standard-size floor harp. It is, however, expensive.

The Autoharp is cheaper, though not quite as good, of course. It is a modern lyre, a small instrument but with enough strings (37 in the big model) to coax diverse melodies from it. Autoharps range from $30 to $50.

The Zither. As Hamlet gave publicity to the recorder (you will remember that he said it was as easy to play as lying), so did The Third Man movie bring to the fore that old Bavarian peasant instrument, the zither. In fact, a brand of zithers is now called "Third Man Zithers." A zither is played somewhat like a guitar, and costs around $30. A very intriguing affair.

This is but a partial list, a very partial list. Its purpose is to induce you to look at and try and ask questions about such instruments at the music store. You may get an idea for a musical Christmas present, one to give to yourself preferably, or to others who feel that irreplaceable attraction resides in self-made music.

Christmas Decorations

PHOTOGRAPH BY TED KAPPER

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's glamorous, universally adaptable Christmas decorations will charm anyone who has ever struggled with the storing of Christmas ornaments.

Since for the most part they are made of paper, and are either flat in themselves or designed to fold flat, you could store the whole assortment in a box or package no larger than 36″ x 17″ x 3″ deep. That's space-saving. There's nothing fragile about them, either, so they demand no kid-glove treatment. They're so light that the complete set weighs only 1 lbs. 14¾ oz.

Shown above, as they look when you buy them and when you put them away for next year, they are: 1. White Tissue Tree. 2. Small Finial and Base. 3. Set of 3 Hoops (they nest). 4. Roped Finial. 5. Honeycomb. 6. Set of 3 Golden S-Links. 7. Full Starbursts, 24″ and 16″. 8. Set of 2 9½″ Full Starbursts. 9. Open-center Starbursts, 16″ and 24″. 10. Set of 2 Spencerian Scrolls with stapling pins.

Decorating advice by mail

If you're decorating or refurnishing your home, House Beautiful offers you this personal service

How many times have you said: "If I could only talk to someone who really knows decorating, I could whip that room into shape"? Well, here is your big opportunity. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL is offering you the consulting services of Elaine Neal, an expert who knows the home furnishings field inside out.

This is not a service handled by a department or a group of people. It is a truly personal service done by one person for one person. In other words, every room is visualized as a unit and seen through one pair of eyes from start to finish. We believe that this is the only way to achieve a thoroughly satisfying room scheme. But so personal and complete a service is not a matter of a few minutes' thought and the typing of a form letter. Before a line can be written, your problem calls for thoughtful evaluation, experiment with color and furniture placement, and a re-evaluation of our suggested solution before it is sent to you. All this takes time. And since so many readers turn to Mrs. Neal for advice, we urge you to allow her plenty of time to give you her best efforts.

Mrs. Neal tries to get her answers out as promptly as possible, of course, and this usually means within four to six weeks. But at certain seasons—particularly in the spring and fall—the mail piles up at such a rate that the time lapse can be quite long. And the only fair thing is to answer the letters in their proper turn. Therefore, we ask you to be patient with us should your answer not reach you within the four-to-six-week limit.

Try to send in your plans and information well ahead of the date by which you wish to complete your rooms, and follow carefully the directions on the opposite page.

This is what you should send us:

1. Send us a floor plan drawn to ¼-inch scale on good white paper. (Please do not send blueprints.) Your plan should show window and door placements, with measurements and dimensions, ceiling height, and distances fireplace or jogs extend from wall. Indicate the location of radiation, pipes, and electric outlets. Tell us the kind of windows you have, whether sash or casement, small or large panes, the distance of sills from the floor. Tell us in what direction the windows face, and if the room is light or dark.

2. List your favorite colors, and tell us which styles of decoration and furniture you prefer. List the furnishings you wish to keep and what you desire to buy new. Tell us whether your taste leans to wallpaper or paint.

3. Describe your location, whether city, suburban, or country. If there is a particular condition which must affect your choice of furnishings, please mention it. State your problems clearly in separate paragraphs. The more carefully you follow the instructions, the more helpful you will find the decorating advice you receive.

This is what we do for you:

1. We will send your floor plan back to you, showing your furniture arranged in a comfortable, balanced manner.

2. We will suggest color schemes and send color guide samples of wallpaper, paint colors, and fabrics. We cannot, however, guarantee that all fabrics will be available in all regions, but our samples will serve as guides for your shopping.

3. We will suggest draperies, accessories, and the placement of pictures, mirrors, and lamps.

pepper. Mix thoroughly and spread on both sides of each fish. Pour melted butter over the fish and cover them with fine cracker crumbs. Grill over low heat. Serve with:

Devil Sauce

Put ¼ cup dry white wine, 1 tablespoon vinegar, 1 tablespoon chopped shallots and ¼ teaspoon pepper in a small saucepan over low flame. Simmer, stirring constantly with wooden spoon until reduced to half its volume. Add 1 cup tomato juice and 1 cup white wine. Bring to a boil, simmer and add 1¼ tablespoons flour thoroughly mixed with 1¼ tablespoons butter. Stir and watch carefully. The sauce should be perfectly smooth. Mix 1 tablespoon dry mustard, 1 tablespoon French mustard and ½ tablespoon anchovy paste, ¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper, ¼ teaspoon powdered saffron. Stir carefully and simmer for 10 minutes. Remove from flame, strain into sauceboat and serve at the same time as the fish.

Cock in Wine

Cut a young cock or a young chicken in serving pieces. In an enamel-lined pot melt 3 tablespoons butter, add ¾ cup diced side-fat of pork, 6 small onions, 4 shallots and 1 medium-size carrot cut in thin slices. Brown these in butter. Remove and place pieces of chicken in pot and brown over high heat. Add salt, pepper and 2 cloves of crushed garlic. Remove the browned pork fat, onions, shallots and carrot. Heat 3 tablespoons brandy, light and pour into pot. Sprinkle ¾ tablespoon flour into the pot. Stir with a wooden spoon for 2 or 3 minutes, then add 1 cup fresh mushrooms and 1 cup hot good dry white wine. Increase heat, add pork fat and vegetables. Cook uncovered for a ¼ hour. Serve very hot.

Chicken Montsouris

Cut a chicken down the back and flatten it with a mallet. Put it in a casserole with pepper, salt and ¼ pound butter over high flame. As soon as the butter bubbles, put in oven preheated to 400° F. Baste frequently. After 35 minutes remove from oven. Put chicken on serving dish. Put the casserole over medium flame and add 2 finely chopped shallots. Heat ½ cup brandy, light it and pour into casserole. Add 2 tablespoons heavy cream, 1 teaspoon finely chopped tarragon. Stir with wooden spoon. Before it boils, add 5 tablespoons butter cut in small pieces. Tip casserole in all directions until butter is melted. Pour over chicken and serve.

Minute Squabs or Young Pigeons

Cut the squabs in half. Flatten them gently with a mallet. Paint with melted butter. In a frying pan over hot flame put 2 squabs and ½ cup butter. Keep turning the pieces so that they do not burn. They will be cooked in 12 minutes. When they are half cooked, add 1 tablespoon onion juice. Place the squabs on preheated serving dish. Add to contents of pan 1 tablespoon Cognac. Scrape pan to detach glaze. Stir in ½ cup hot bouillon. Add 1 teaspoon chopped parsley and pour over squabs.

Rosettes of Beef

For 6 servings take 12 slices from the small end of a fillet of beef. Melt ½ cup butter in a fireproof earthenware casserole with a cover that closes hermetically, or in an enamel-lined pot, over medium heat, and add the fillet. Heat 4 tablespoons brandy, light and pour over the fillet. Add 1 large onion chopped fine. Cover with heavy cream and ½ cup strong beef bouillon, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Cover and place in preheated 350-degree oven for 1½ hours. Place in serving dish with sauce poured over it.

Creamed Cucumbers

heat. Cover the saucepan and boil from 5 to 10 minutes until they are no longer hard. They should not be overcooked. Remove from heat, place them under cold water tap until they are tepid. Drain and wipe dry. In a saucepan over a low heat put 1½ cups cream sauce. When hot add cucumber. Gently stir so that the sauce does not scorch. When the cucumbers and sauce come to a boil add 4 tablespoons butter cut in small pieces. Reduce heat to low flame and tip saucepan in all directions until butter is melted. Place in preheated serving dish and serve at once.

Potatoes Smothered in Butter

Peel 2 pounds medium-size potatoes, cut in 8 pieces. In a saucepan over medium heat put ¾ cup butter. When the butter has melted, put the potatoes into the saucepan and cover. Stir with a wooden spoon from time to time. Reduce heat after a ¼ hour. If the butter is too reduced add more. (This will depend on the kind of potatoes used.) Increase heat to medium, then to high. The potatoes should be browned and crisp on the outside and soft on the inside. Salt (no pepper) and serve very hot.

Salad Niçoise

Take equal parts of diced potatoes and diced string beans. Boil separately in salted water. Do not overcook. When cooked, remove from water and drain thoroughly. When cold, mix the 2 vegetables, add 2 parts oil to 1 part lemon juice, salt and pepper. Place in a mound in salad dish and decorate with anchovies, stoned black olives and capers. Surround with quarters of peeled tomatoes. Sprinkle generously with chopped basil.

Winter Salad

Large sweet Spanish onions cut in thin rings with this sauce: Two tablespoons French mustard, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 tablespoon paprika, 1 cup heavy cream. Mix well and pour over onions at the last moment.

Salad Livonière

A mixture of vegetables of the season in equal quantities. For 4 cups, add ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon French mustard, 3 tablespoons brandy, 3 tablespoons Madeira, 2 tablespoons oil and 1 tablespoon vinegar.

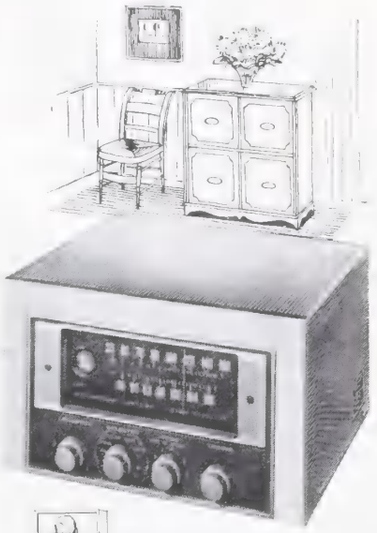
Croûte à la Belle Aurore

Cut stale cake in slices ⅓ inch thick. Sprinkle them generously with rum. Cover half of them with very thick apple sauce to which has been added 1 tablespoon heavy cream to each cup of apple sauce and 3 tablespoons tiny dried mixed glacé fruits. Place the other slices of cake on the prepared ones, pressing so that they hold together. Dip in beaten egg, cover with rolled sifted cracker crumbs and fry in butter over medium heat. Serve with:

Hot Sabayon Sauce

For 6 servings, stir in saucepan over lowest heat as in bain-marie 3 yolks of eggs with 8 tablespoons sugar until thoroughly mixed. Add very slowly 2 cups Marsala, beat with a whisk until it thickens. Serve in preheated bowl.

The Vegetable Gardens at "Bilignin"



For 14 successive years the gardens at Bilignin were my joy, working in them during the summers and planning and dreaming of them during the winters. The summers frequently commenced early in April with the planting and ended late in October with the last gathering of the winter vegetables. Bilignin, surrounded by mountains and not far from the French Alps —from higher ground a few miles away Mont Blanc was frequently visible—made early planting uncertain. One year we lost the first planting of string beans, another year the green peas were caught by late frost. It took me several years to know the climate and quite as many more to know the weather.

Experience is never at bargain price. Then, too, I obstinately refused to accept the lore of the farmers, judging it, with the prejudice of a townswoman, to be nothing but superstition. They told me never to transplant parsley, and not to plant it on Good Friday. We did it in California, was my weak reply. They said not to plant at the moment of the new or full moon. The seed would be as indifferent as I was, was my impatient answer to this. But it was not. Before the end of our tenancy of the lovely house and gardens at Bilignin, I had become not only weather-wise, but a fairly successful gardener.

In May the first gathering of the garden of salads, radishes and herbs, made me feel like a mother about her baby—how could anything so beautiful be mine? And this emotion of wonder filled me for each vegetable as it was gathered every year. There is nothing that is comparable to it, as satisfactory or as thrilling as gathering the vegetables one has grown.

Later, when the vegetables were ready to be picked, it never occurred to us to question what way to cook them. Naturally the simplest, just to steam or boil them and serve them with the excellent country butter or cream we had from a farmer almost within calling distance. Later still when we had guests and the vegetables had lost the aura of a new-born miracle, sauces added variety.

In the beginning it was the habit to pick all vegetables very young except beetroots, potatoes, large squash and pumpkins because of one's eagerness, and later because of their delicate flavour when cooked. That prevented serving sauces with some vegetables—green peas, string beans (indeed all peas and beans) and lettuce. There were exceptions, and for French guests this was one of them:

Green Peas à la Good Wife

Put 12 young onions in a saucepan over medium heat with 3 tablespoons butter and ½ cup fat back of pork previously boiled for 5 minutes, drained and cut in cubes of ½ inch. When the onions are lightly browned, remove with the cubes of fat back. In the saucepan stir 1 tablespoon flour. Mix well and gradually add 1¾ cups veal bouillon. Allow to boil 15 minutes and salt. Then add 4 cups shelled green peas, the diced pork fat and the onions. Cover and cook for 15 minutes according to the size and age of the peas.

A sauce on string beans is a desecration, especially string beans grown in France. Even in my well-loved California they were less tender, less flavoursome, and not as free from strings. Still they could be cooked, with our French friends in mind, disguised to my mind as:

String Beans In the Provençal Manner

Heat 3 tablespoons olive oil in frying pan. Add ¼ cup capers, ¼ cup boned anchovies, 1 crushed clove garlic and 4 cups string beans previously boiled until tender in boiling water with ¾ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper in an uncovered saucepan. Toss them in the frying pan until they are well mixed with the various ingredients in it. Serve hot with chopped parsley and finely chopped spring onion sprinkled on them.

As for beetroots, their excuse for being is the fine colour they add to pale dishes. As a vegetable this recipe combines the decorative with the tasty:

Purée of Beetroot

Bake beetroots in oven till quite soft, peel and mash through strainer with a potato masher, add ⅓ their volume of thick cream sauce. Place over low heat in a casserole, add salt and pepper. When about to boil, add 1 tablespoon butter cut in small pieces to 2 cups purée. Do not allow to boil, do not stir but tip casserole in all directions. Serve in a mound on preheated dish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. Or serve as a border around veal or pork roast.

Most of our men guests had their breakfasts served on the terrace. The breakfast trays were my pride, though the linen and porcelain were simple. In the market place in Chambéry we unearthed some amusing coloured glassware, 1850-1890, from Savoy, not at an antique dealer's but in a store that sold glassware. We bought all there was. Berries, fruits, salads and vegetables served in them were subjects for still-life pictures. For French guests an abbreviated American breakfast was served, somewhat more ample however than their usual coffee and rolls or croissants with butter, jam, marmalade or jelly. Croissants are a delicious accompaniment to breakfast or to tea. So are brioches.

Stable as the alphabet! Go out today and buy any product of any good manufacturer's brand...ask for the same thing tomorrow, or weeks from now... match 'em up, and they're uniformly good, or better.

This uniformity is no accident. Every manufacturer works hard at it because he knows that only unfailing goodness will keep you buying his product. So he's mighty sure never to let quality slip. If he changes his product at all, you can bet it's a change for the better.

Croissants or Crescents

Heat ½ cup milk. When it is warm mix into it 1 package of compressed yeast. Sift 1 cup flour and mix with the yeast to make a sponge. Allow to rise, about ½ hour. Sift 3 cups flour into a large bowl. Put the yeast at the bottom in the centre of the bowl and gradually work in 3½ cups milk and the flour. Put aside until it has risen to twice its size. Then place it on a lightly floured board and knead thoroughly until the dough no longer sticks to the hands. Roll out and place ¼ cup butter, which has been worked with the hands into a square, in the centre, fold the dough from the sides to meet in the centre. Roll with the hands into a ball and keep in a cool place for several hours or even for the night. Then roll out again and divide into pieces the size of an egg. Roll each one into a cylinder and put aside for 10 minutes. Then very lightly roll them out to ⅓ inch thickness. Roll from one corner, bend into the shape of crescents and put aside for 35 minutes. Place on a lightly buttered baking sheet, paint with pastry brush dipped in slightly beaten egg mixed with 1 tablespoon water. Bake in preheated 425-degree oven.

Brioches

Sift 2 cups of flour into a bowl, add 3 eggs, stir with a wooden spoon until completely smooth. Continuing to stir add 1 more egg, 4 tablespoons milk in which 1 cup of sugar has been mixed with 1 tablespoon rum and 3 teaspoons baking powder dissolved in 1 tablespoon water. Mix thoroughly. Add ¾ cup softened butter. Mix well, put aside for 12 hours in a cool spot (not in the refrigerator). Pour into deep round buttered mold and bake about 30 minutes in 375-degree oven. These brioches are very nice baked in very small muffin tins, about 20 minutes in 350-degree oven.

When the autumn came, the last harvest was so occupying that one forgot that it meant leaving the garden for the return to Paris. Not only did the winter vegetables have to be gathered and placed to dry for a day before packing, but their roots and leaves had to be put on the compost heap with manure and leaves and packed down for the winter. The day the huge baskets were packed was my proudest in all the year. The cold sun would shine on the orange-coloured carrots, the green, yellow and white pumpkins and squash, the purple eggplants and a few last red tomatoes. They made for me more poignant colour than any post-impressionist picture. Merely to look at them made all the rest of the year's pleasure insignificant.

Gertrude Stein took a more practical attitude. She came out into the denuded wet cold garden and, looking at the number of baskets and crates, asked if they were all being sent to Paris, that if they were the expressage would ruin us. She thought that there were enough vegetables for an institution and reminded me that our household consisted of three people. There was no question that, looking at that harvest as an economic question, it was disastrous, but from the point of view of the satisfaction which work and the esthetic confer, it was sublime.

Our final, definite leaving of the gardens came one cold winter day, all too appropriate to our feelings and the state of the world. A sudden moment of sunshine peopled the gardens with all the friends and others who had passed through them. Ah, there would be another garden, the same friends, possibly, no probably, new ones, and there would be other stories to tell and to hear. And so we left Bilignin, never to return.

And now it amuses me to remember that the only confidence I ever gave was given twice, in the upper garden, to two friends. The first one gaily responded, "How very amusing!" The other friend asked with no little alarm, "But Alice, have you ever tried to write?" As if a cookbook had anything to do with writing!

The Way to Be Creative at Christmas

The major articles in this December issue can help you develop art appreciation and a trained eye. An art teacher gives you some additional thoughts, exercises and inspirations. Whether you are a teacher or pupil, try them

By JUDY BLUNDELL ADLER

For anyone interested in developing his art ability, one of the most important things to understand is true creativity—the ability to create or be creative in such a way that our basic esthetic responses are awakened. When this happens, we gain a new interest in the things we see every day and take for granted. We find ourselves enjoying special qualities of objects and materials such as their size, shape, surface, color and texture.

The major articles in this December issue help us to understand creativity. They offer us, as one writer puts it, "experiments in living"; for what we create, in the long run, is our own "aliveness" and our own environment.

Creating something for temporary use by working with expendable materials makes a good beginning exercise. Holiday decorating becomes an exercise in creating style and good decorating. (See pages 112-121.) Many of the familiar things we take for granted have been used in such a way that they offer new interest and great excitement. From this article and the one on An Adventure in Free Taste (pages 126-131) make a list of the things used which you would never have thought of as holiday decorations. Consider them in relation to this statement made by Matisse: "To create is to express what we have within ourselves . . . We have to nourish our feeling, and we can do so only with materials derived from the world about us."

Try an experiment in creative holiday decorating, using familiar materials about the house, or objects picked up on that trip last month, or colorful yarns from your knitting bag.

What else can you add to this list?

In the classroom holiday decorating gives the teacher a real opportunity for creative group work. Do away with stereotyped green paper trees and cotton snowballs glued to windows. Give children an opportunity to grow esthetically by planning, with them, different decorations. Some of these should be objects within the child's experience (suggested and brought in by him). Some should come from outside his environment, giving him broader experience. For examples see trees on pages 126 through 130.

In this way, the child engages in an attitude of exploration and discovery which will help him maintain his natural curiosity—a quality basic to the adult as well as the child's creative mind.

This attitude of exploration will also help one to discover the variety of materials and natural forces in his environment. In so doing, he will discover new interests and (perhaps surprisingly) new abilities of his own. From this point of view, let's explore the "seven principles" on page 113. First, select the key words in each:

1. Discipline is the most important word in the first "principle." Look at the decorations for artist Millard Sheets' living room on page 118. There is no clutter here. The orderliness and planning (which discipline implies) is evident immediately. Look also at the "egg tree" on page 131 (by Mildred Bryan Brooks)—well disciplined to exclude all except the one design motif (the glittering eggs).

3. Uncomplicated is our next key word. Here it is related to color and parallels the discipline relating to form. Look again at the one-color tree on page 115: look at the blue and gold color scheme on page 108.

4. The word bold takes our attention in this statement. Just as big scale produces a big effect, boldness in planning design gives character. See the boldly scaled Spencerian Scrolls on page 105; the carved bamboo cylinder on page 107. Note the candlesticks in the photograph at the bottom of page 114. (Note also their "big effect" in terms of scale.)

5. Appropriate is a term well understood in other areas of our lives. Make your own applications of it to design. Select the trees appropriate for a school room, for a modern house, for a traditional, elegant interior. Note how some decorations are suitable for one place, wrong for another.

7. Materials at hand may seem to suggest limitations. Think again, however, of the many materials used in the decorations shown in the front of the magazine. (Did you make your own list of unusual and surprising ones?) Note the ribbon tree on page 129 and the pine cone decoration on page 115.

As you work in design, whether at home or club, or in the classroom, explore the possibilities of varying form and size and color. Explore the different possibilities of familiar things. Develop your curiosity. The single experience of creating style in a holiday decoration makes your daily life that much richer (by added visual satisfaction and creative action). We do not mean that you need to make forms yourself if you are not so inclined. Arranging the handsome new ornaments which can be bought in stores is also creating style. The important thing is to create and continue to be creative. See what satisfaction it will give you to express yourself, to "experiment in living"!

cases the secondary use of the screen will be only slightly handicapped by an excess border of white on the edge of the picture. Again my personal choice is for the rectangular screen since I am quite a bug about movies.

Editing viewer: This simple machine is as essential to good movie-making as a mirror is to good grooming. It allows you to take a close look at the material at hand. An enlarged view of the film can be hand-wound as fast or slowly as you wish. Rewinds and splicing equipment are attached for editing purposes. Prices vary, from about $55 to $155, and the machines are available for both 8mm and 16mm films. If there's an earnest movie-maker in your home, he shouldn't be without one.

Still cameras: Photography is probably the most widespread hobby in the world, and certainly none does more to create and sustain interests in the people and places about us. Today picture-taking is being encouraged just as much as painting and drawing as a means of self-expression. For children, the general trend is to start with a low priced box camera—now available from about $5 to about $20. For indoors shooting, flash attachments can be added—and in some models the flash is already attached.

Teen-agers who are ready for more advanced photography will appreciate the cameras with simple adjustment parts, which range in cost from about $25 to as much as $70. For the serious photographer, there are several choices. The 35mm still camera is used for most color transparencies. For good, or better than good, black-and-white snapshots, the reflex cameras give a high range of artistry in composition. These cameras vary greatly in price—from $50 to over $400, with several noteworthy budget models around $30. In general it can be said that you pay for precision, for quality, operational details, and maneuverability.

If you take pictures now and then, a simple, inexpensive camera will suit you well. If you take pictures quite often, get a versatile camera that will give excellent results under all lighting and action conditions. As one camera dealer recently explained, the film costs the same whether you use it in a fine camera or a simple one—it's the camera that gives the results. In judging cameras you can look for and compare such items as fast shutters (to catch action without blurring), fast lenses (the smaller the number of the f stop the easier it is to take clear pictures in low light levels), flash synchronization (units generally are bought separately), rangefinder (to measure distances for focusing), and interchangeable lenses (to allow for variety of viewpoint—wide-angle, telephoto, close-up).

Slide Projectors and Viewers: Although nothing is apt to ever replace the appeal of low-cost black-and-white snapshots, the 35mm color transparencies are now enjoying a tremendous popularity. Their richness of tone and texture is so great that they can easily be projected to many times actual size. Projectors sell from about $40 to $170, and they require a separate screen (preferably one designed especially for color film). Table viewers also can be used for enlarging 35mm transparencies—and here the mechanism is all in one, no screen is required. Prices range, for the better models, from $60 to about $100. And of course there is a great number of inexpensive hand-held viewers, costing only a few dollars. For the color-slide devotee, filing boxes and cabinets are a useful gift—prices range from $1 to $20 or more.

Miscellany: For out-of-the-way effects, three-dimensional pictures are creating quite a stir among hobbyists. Cameras cost as little as $85, the projector costs about $175, table-viewers about $85, and hand-viewers about $20.

The polaroid camera, which prints your picture within minutes after you take it, serves some special photographic needs exceptionally well—particularly those which require an accurate view in places which are not easily accessible. The cameras are priced from $90 to over $200.

Equipment for still pictures and 8mm movies is available from most local camera supply stores throughout the country. For a list of dealers who specialize in 16mm movie equipment, write to the National Audio-Visual Association, 2540 Eastwood Avenue, Evanston, Illinois, and ask for a free copy of the NAVA Directory.
